rop out of the clips one bit or the duct tape! I have 2 fractured baskets already. However the D6 holds it's own pretty good on the floor tom, still again though not quite the clarity of the 421s. I have never used 57s on the toms, just the snare but I rented one of my boards out to a concert last year and the guy mic'd up everything with 57's. It was killer! I think it was more his engineering ability shining there though... I have never heard 57s on all to include the Bass drum sound so good anywhere else.

TCI wouldn't say "no artifacts" but the results are really good... but I doubt if I would use it to re-pitch or re-time a song on an album... just individual tracks. The guy giving the demo at NAMM turned a regular 4 on the floor tune into a shuffle with it. If you wanted to use it for realigning drum tracks ala Beat Detective, the Studio version would work best.

I quite like mine with 2 512c's.

The dx window stays openn and the cursor works but no dx plugin can be selected and the ok button and cancel although they can be lit there is no action either selecting or cancelling.

Very annoying thing !

Any workaround ?

And, re: your "same designer" question... Rupert designed a whole shitload of stuff, none of which sounds anything like the other.
Never used an AMEK of any kind, so I can't compare that sound to the ISA sound. but to me the ISA series does sound pretty close to the original ISA 110's, which I have used - not exactly like them, but damn close - and those preamps sucketh not.

By genre, I'm surprised that Metal sold more than RAP. In fact, I'm surprised that Rock is about three times bigger than RAP. You'd never know it by watching MTV or by watching any music award shows. You'd think nothing is bigger than RAP.

I was also surprised that the band No Doubt wasn't listed in the top ten albums from 1991-2006. I read and was told by Matt Wilder and Tony Ferguson (Interscope Records) that Tragic Kingdom sold around 16 million records and set sales records???

eat the iTunes music store, and develop the iPod? It wasn't free, and the record companies couldn't do it by them selves, or they would have. What did the advertising cost Apple? Do you think the record industry help Apple with any of the cost? The answer is NO! They went it alone. Apple helped turn the record industry around.

Apple could, and would make more money with the DRM in place. they are open to doing something different, and opening up. what more do you want? What they have in place is not true DRM. You can have multiple copies. The industry should thank god for Apple!

James I don't know what Endless Wire is, but I'm guessing by this response it's a geezer rock platter. Assuming that's correct, what new sonic ground is it breaking? I didn't say every hip hop song has some amazing message or incredible songwriting, I said their pushing sonic boundaries and envelopes in a way that geezer rock is not, esp the ones listening to the Jamaicans who are really on a roll. So what is so great sound wise about Endless Wire?

Second thing I tried was the (TDM only) Crane Song Phoenix plugin. This is well worth checking out if you mix with PT. It adds some of the qualities back in the sound that Paris exhibits.

Cheers,

TCHi Thad,

I'm not exactly sure what pushing sonic boundries means after reading this.

Is it the lack of sonic cliché so to speak? I'm asking because normally I understand what you are saying, or at least think I do.

Thanks

If you had purchased $1,000.00 of Nortel stock one year ago, it would now be worth $49.00.
With Enron, you would have had $16.50 left of the original $1,000.00.
With WorldCom, you would have had less than $5.00 left.
With Lucent, you would have $3.50 left of the original $1,000.00.
But, if you had purchased $1,000.00 worth of beer one year ago, drank all the beer, then turned in the cans for the aluminum recycling REFUND you would have had $214.00.
Based on the above, the best current investment advice is to drink heavily and recycle.
It's called the 401-Keg Plan."Kim" <hidensounds@hotmail.com> wrote:

Get the new Who disc. Endless Wire

Listen to it a couple of times. It takes some warming up to, but it is something really special. You can't have a new Beatles disc in 2007, but you can have a real Who record that sounds like today.

In most of Australia there's no such thing. South Australia offers 5c a can/bottle.
That's maybe a 3% refund vs your 21%...

I'm not 100% sold that this is genuine, that Apple would really open up iPods to use any software in the world to load and unload music, but if I could load .ogg files onto a Nano from my Debian laptop I would buy one in a second. .flac support would really, really be nice too.

But the real point here, I think, is that Apple knows it owns the portable device market now and they're not terribly happy with the deals they struck with the media cartels to make that market. Legitimate complaint in many ways, 'Hey fellas, before us you were stuck flogging CDs nobody wanted to buy anymore, and we dug the ditches to get you out of that mess. But people don't like the DRM and we think we can sell a little more now that you guys aren't allergic to the term 'download.'

But Apple is in many ways a victim of their own success. Having made the iPod the market dominant portable player, everyone else says (almost certainly incorrectly), 'Hey, let's make our own brilliant little player for [insert type of media that cartel wants to flog] and keep from paying Estebahn Jobs his vig.' And your ISP will want their ounce of flesh, and everyone who thinks they're getting screwed in the deal will try to find some DMCA reason to sue everyone else, etc. and so forth.

So I think the Jobs piece is good, though a bit disingenuous. And as I said, when I can load OGG/FLAC to my iPod from my linux boxes I'd love to have one.

TCBHi Dimitrios,

I do have the MEC, but it might cost more to ship to Greece than it is worth.

Small problem, however. With my 8-in card, he accidentally (I assume) packed an ADAT front plate. Can I assume someone who is receiving an ADAT card from DJ found an 8-in faceplate in kind? Please contact me and we can arrange a swap.

I am posting this here because DJ's email is getting kicked back to me. Not a slam here - I can understand how, in the madness of disassembling and packing all your gear up a switch was made.

cuss, oh say, music, within your context.

Why don't we discuss geezer rock vs. commercial hip hop?

How about geezer jazz vs. misogynist rap?

We could have a go at geezer baroque vs. Bling R & B where Hummers of both kinds are a must-have in all videos

I am really looking forward to a chat about geezer bebop vs. gangsta rap. That one will be fun.

BTW, which reductionistic, anti-art category do you put your own music in? Or does it have all kinds of new sounds, so it's OK to not write good songs?

Endless Wire, BTW is the new Who disc and the sonic landscapes are absolutely breathtaking in places. You should listen. Oh, and there is also some actual songwriting and composition going on.

Geezer Rock Rules;)

Considering that nearly all rap/hip-hop involves recycling something that someone else has already done (whether it's a sampled loop from a geezer rock song or an Acid loop or repeating one-shot sample that someone else has recorded), I'd say they're breaking, oh... ZERO new ground.

NeilNot Me..I'm not surprised... Both Rock and RAP have been battling each for the better part of the last 10 years. Rap

RAP Sales have been dominate for the last 2 years with groups such as Outcast. But this where things get's confusing.. Both Outcast & Ludacris aven Em & EM where catagorzed aS ROCK!!!! As is Jay-Z..

So, you can see that how the numbers for Rock climbed. Some in the industry calls this racism. I can tel you that in my neighborhood (Macomb) Mi nearly all kid(Wjites , Blacks, Hispanic) listen to only Hip Hop rap..And No Rock..

And that's the trend all over this world not just the US..

>First time using Wavelab, and first time I've run into this problem. I bounced a project (16bit) to a wav and sent it over lan to another computer to edit in Wavelab. After I finished I sent it back to Paris. When I pull it into Paris, it shows up as a 3K file??? Dragging it on the PField yields zilch. The stereo file from WL is over 45K and plays fine in MediaPlayer. What gives??? I am attempting to build a new computer and I know the EDS is a 33Mghz, 5 volt PCI card, but is it a "keyed" 5 volt card?
I just finished reading a specification paper on PCI 2.1, 2.2, and 2.3. To make it short, this is my understanding:
if the EDS is a "keyed" card, it will NOT be compatible with PCI 2.3, but 2.1 and 2.2 would be.

Of course, most Mobo manufacturers don't even bother listing what version the 'classic' PCI slots are so if this is a keyed card, I need to know. Actually, if any of you could tell me what kind a computer you're running your PARIS on, that would be really helpful. I would like to build the most 'modern' computer possible, but the most 'current' stable config I've heard of was a P4 running XP. And I don't even know if that was a 775 or 478!

If anyone out there could shed some light on this I would be soooo grateful.
Thanks ;)Thanks, guys. Friend of a friend needed advice....

connections accomplished. I'm distrubiting the clock of my Mytek A/D converter using a Lucid Gen X 6, sending to everything else. It's clocking like a dream. this is something that always concerns me. I have eliminated about 2/3 of the massive cabling insanity I had going on here. Things are still a bit messy and I've got a few more odds and ends that haven't shown up yet, but I'm getting there. Very stable, sounds very good to my ears.
Getting those 4 x CRT's out of here has cooled the room down about 20 degrees and since I also moved the massive platform that they were sitting on out of the room, it sounds a bit different....clearer and more open (DOH!!!) so that's something I'll have to get used to but actually, I think it's going to be an improvement in the acoustic environment. I seem to be hearing with a bit more acuity, especially reverb tails and delays. These are more obvious now in the new, less cluttered environment.

There must be half a mile of cabling of various kinds coiled up in various parts of the control room right now. It's going to take me half a day to sort it out and figure out what to do with it.

I'll probably have a cable sale in a couple of weeks, as soon as I'm sure what I need and what I want to keep, just in case.

..in wavelab you need to search around for a setting that says "save file headers" or something to that effect.

Uncheck it.Disable it.

Then resave the file.

You should be good to go.

Jacksons voice quite a lot, but when half of a CD consists of looped samples of everything from Ventura Highway" to "You're So

So, next time you wanna prove to us how hip you are by talking remember "Come With Me".

In fact, I think you should one-up him... why not just write & rap some new lyrics over a looped main riff of "Black Dog", that was an even bigger hit for Zep than "Kashmir" was. lol

I'm clueless about these boxes though I've seen some plugins that purport to do this. I didn't think too much of them though. This looks like it could be a very useful tool if used wisely (as I suppose could be the case with the plugins too ;o)

I can see how this might be used to process certain busses to get a 3D positional effect for certain instruments, then freeze (or bounce) these, apply it to another bus, etc. I'm not sure about full mixes, though from some of the info I've been reading, it looks like it works nicely on a full mix as well.

If/when you have the time, would you mind sharing your use methodology using the BASE?

See my responses to your comments below:

While making shitloads of money for themselves in the process... doesn't do much good to have an iPod if you can't play anything back on it, BUT WAIT - if we sell people the music for the iPod, too, then we'll make even MORE money! Nothing wrong with that, it was a win-win for both Apple & the labelss - but don't come across like Apple's so charitable & generous that they decided to save an entire floundering industry out of the goodness of their hearts.

>There were other companies that were around like mp3.com that

Yes, IMO there was too much unprofessional crap on mp3.com; yeah there was some really good indie stuff, too, but you had to filter out a hgundred pieces of crap in order to find one gem... wasn't it Phil Spector who said "LP's are just two good songs & ten pieces of crap" ? lol mp3.com was two good songs for every like five hundred thousand pieces of crap.

Which proves what? That consumers either DO like to be force-fed by the biglabelstarmakingspinmachines, or they actually in fact, have some discernment, after all.

Yes, I'm really sorry for people like Britney Spears, Snoop Dog, and J-Lo who the labels built up to the point where they can have their own clothing lines, perfume brands, etc, etc, and make millions upon millions of merchandising $ that the labels never even get to touch - where would these people be without the labels' money launching them in the first place?
Even the mid-level artists do pretty well... they make shitloads more than any of us do, and while that may not put them in the same league as the A-listers, they still end up with a damn good set of mansions & exotic cars out of the deal.

>Who do you think makes all the money? In a typical record

And why should it not have to be paid back first? Should the labels be a big fucking charity that doles out tens of millions per year to however many bands/artists & then let the artist reap all the profits first?

I have a little record company, and the answer is: very few.

>What access would you have to the market place?

Hardly any. It takes a lot of money & muscle to break through the noise, no doubt. But this is an entirely different issue altogether... how many iTunes (or Rhapsody, or EMusic) downloads are NOT from major-label artists? Hardly any in proportion, really; so the fact that people have access to indie stuff now is irrelevant, they're still buying/seeking out that which is most aggressively marketed to them by Radio/MTV/Fuse/Etc.

>Yes, I feel so sorry for the record companies and the

I dunno, do you know how much it costs to swill gallons of Cristal every night or pour a pound of blow up your nose every month? Those poor artists getting screwed, how dare the labels own a corporate jet when they should be giving some more of that money to those people we see on MTV Cribs... hey, that guy's still got room for a seventh quarter-million dollar car in his driveway - how about we give some of it to him?

Neil You can get most of the same effect using standard M/S techniques, but both the Behringer Edison and the BASE, seem to be more effective with better mono compatibility.

I have used the two units primarily for two types of effects.

1. Reduced center on reverb returns: This can help to take the wash out of the center and still leave relatively long but unobtrusive tails at the L/R

2. To make sections of the song extend outside the normal stereo field. I generally apply this sound to large vocal chorus sections or occasionally to the main reverb return but only on the chorus sections. Stereo room mics on drums or other instruments also can be effective in this mode. Applying this to binaural mic recording can do some very wild things (a personal favorite) although mono compatibility can go away in a hurry.

The BASE implanted its own special sound that was reminiscent of a good tube unit or Class A Neve. Very smooth and delicious.

I did use the BASE across the stereo buss on a few mixes, but I have not been happy with the Edison in this capacity.

Oh, I think most people would see some qualitative difference between throwing samples together and learning to play a Chuck Berry song.

As with punk, even your esthetic sense will too become a period piece as the culture absorbs it. Yesterday's news.

Instead of looking for a new trend, I prefer doing what I do well.

Oh, and shhhhh, don't tell anyone, but that is what the trendsetters are doing; what they do well. They are too busy to worry about all this, to follow a trend, and to criticize other musicians, even old ones. Those who do, who worry about the next trend and where the new sounds may come from, are all behind the curve by the amount time of the writing, production, and marketing process.

In other words, anyone who gives a shit about "where the new sounds are coming from" is 6 months to 2 years behind the curve anyway.

Oh, and as you have seen, the young can be dumped on for their youth, the Jamaicans for their cultural myopia and lack of musical breadth, the rappers for not understanding music at all, and the hip-hoppers for their obsession with money and criminality.

Lessee, how about we come up with some stupid and useless descriptions of these guys...

Maybe

Zit-Rockers

or

Ganja Dancehalls

or perhaps

Numbnutz no-talent Rap hustlers and don't forget Bling-Hop!

The problem with all these stupid phrases, as with "geezer rock"; is not that saying them makes the music bad. It cannot do that.

The problem is that they blind the person who uses them.

just my .02

Actually I do, and like some of the tunes. I hear the need for a producer to focus things a bit. Sounds like a good band for a fun live show.

DCYou know the thing that has always bugged me about this group is how hip-hop gets dismissed out of hand almost every time it's mentioned. If I close my eyes I can almost see the bumperstickers that say RAP=CRAP next to the picture of Calvin peeing on the Chevy.

I love three chord rockers, love the Who, Stones, Beatles, Kinks. But I also (I'm dating myself) love innovative, sonically interesting, thought provoking hip-hop by guys like De La Soul, Pharcyde and Tribe Called Quest.

I don't understand how anyone could listen to that and not find at least something sonically or lyrically interesting. Who gives a rat's ass if it's samples and loops put together.

It also gets me thinking about intolerance. As many of you know, I am a PK. My dad is nutty as a fruitcake intolerant. Bad language, bad manners, things he perceived to be innately 'worthless', how society was going to hell with violence, the emptiness of the consumer society, the list goes on and on. One day he was raving on and on about a movie he had seen. Couldn't stop talking about it. Said it was the best thing he had seen in 20 years.

Go figure, guy can't stand to see a bloody nose, change a diaper or hear a curse word and his favorite movie of the the past 20 years turns out to be BOYS IN THE HOOD!!!!

I play in what I would call a 'Brit flavored pop band' called the Mold Monkeys. You can hear some songs at www.moldmonkeys.com or buy our CD if you actually give a rip, which I suspect you don't. My own personal music I would call 'Reasonably good Thievery Corporation ripoff with treated vocals,' but the pop songwriting in the Monkeys has pushed me in a slightly different direction I'm exploring now. We'll see how that works out.

Never liked The Who all that much. The only Brit geezer rockers I ever really like were the Kinks and the Stones. But if someone else has that record I'll listen to it.

Hi Dimitrios,

pre-modified. It has Black Gate Caps, Burr-Brown chips and an updated power supply.

It sounds very clean compared to a stock unit, but sill not quite as magical removal, but next time I have an opportunity, I will pull it and photograph it for you. I think you will find some DIY info on the web for doing similar mods.

That will have serious consequences.

I am not worried because my teenager and her friends are so omnivorous in their tastes, so curious about all kinds of music, that they will discover music and love it, if given just a bit of exposure. That of course, can be a problem.

I see people like Nick Cannon and P.O.D. and I see real musical skills along with the samples and rapping.

Bitchin! They will own the future, not the braindead samplers and stoned-out thug-rappers.

TCWe're very much a live outfit, though that CD was done with very, very little of my influence. The next one will have my stomp prints all over it and I'm hoping to make it sound MORE live. I'm quite excited with the really bare bones mixes we're getting right now. Our 'signature' is three part harmonies on almost everything with a big loud rock'n'roll noise behind it and we're getting there on the next CD.

As far as a producer, we already have three pretty strong personalities and I don't think another one would add much. And we'd rather not pay one of course. And we have a song on the next CD called 'Hobo Rocket' that's about, you guessed it, a bunch of hobos who take over a rocket, and I wouldn't want some smart producer to keep us from doing all of the stupid, silly stuff we do.

We used to have Derek around which helped a bit.

---=_linux45cb7fb6--FWIW, I wasn't dismissing rap or hip-hop out-of-hand, allimsayinis: don't try & tell me that it's groundbreaking or even remotely original.

When the only thing new or fresh is a vocal line, then there really hasn't been anything "original" in that genre since Kurtis Blow.

Also, what's "PK"?

Yeah, one wouldn't want some smart producer like George Martin coming along & forbidding any silly stuff... you know, like he did with "Yellow Submarine" or "Octopus' Garden".

;)People talking and yelling in rhythm over a sonic background can be listenable, even compelling. But it's harder to be as _musical_ as you can be in genres that make greater use of melody and development.

Lyricaly, when it's just shock lyrics it's not particularly interesting. Even though not all rapping is like that, the genre has that reputation.

When posturing and dance have to take up the slack, sometimes the dancing is spectacular. Other times it's mostly about marching back and forth, repetitive gesturing, crotch grabbing and other simplistic and cheesy moves.

So really, it all depends on the piece and the performer.

I could say similar things about other genres. So it's not the genre, per se, it's the results that opens rappers to criticism from people who would rather hear something more musical.

Also, if you're looking for a virtuostic performance on an instrument or amazing singing, there's not much there in a lot of hip hop. Some, yes, but generally it doesn't deliver those goods. So the question of musical talent comes up.

To point those aspects out isn't dismissing the genre out of hand, it's just recognizing some of the limitations that have become obvious since the day when rapping actually was something new and fresh, and that's been a while.

Cheers,
-Jamie

und 6K for that unit.

Yup, $6k, but sold it to you for $3k if you promised to include the BASE logo on every release you used it on (like Aphex did with the original Exciters).

>Heh, I find this amusing, and thought I'd share it with the group. This is a link to a band I'm currently drumming for (I'm not a drummer) - Forty Minutes of Hell. It's a pretty rowdy group, but all in fun, and when I started mixing it I goofed off with pushing the output of an EDS comp on the L/R buss. It is a bit sloppy, rude, and I'm sure there are slight clips here and there..... but it works for the band - and it's really freaking LOUD. Makes me laugh. So - don't play it for your kids, but some of you might appreciate it. The band's video on their myspace page is.... amusing too. :) ! ? And, if anyone's going down for sxsw, we'll be down around there then.

the album is here.... <http://www.carlamburn.com/fmoh.htm>

the myspace is here.... <http://www.myspace.com/fortyminutesofhell> rock on,

-CarlHow much money can this basket-case chick have had, though? She really never did get the $400+ Million judgement appeal, and I'm sure she's got nothing left from however little her reality show paid her, so what's left? The TrimSpa endorsement money?

Well, I think, I kind of feel, I believe and I think Apple and the record industry had nothing to do with this!

It's in the beats guys, and the bass. And if you think it's easy cook up a groove half as cool as the Diwali riddim and play it for me. Listen to Sean Paul's 'Get Busy' to hear Diwali, it was the supernova riddim of about 3 years ago and you'll still hear it now and then. Maybe try any of the recent Missy Elliot records, Timbaland usually saves his choicest beats for her and he has his ear tuned to dancehall more than almost anyone in US hip hop.

Oh yeah, and scratch me up juggled beat like Qbert while you're at it since it's so easy and unoriginal and all.

TCB

P.S. The last truly original band was Kraftwerk, so even if hip hop ended with Kurtis Blow it's more current.

Would my challenging you to do that suddenly make you wrong?

Enjoy your groove thang.

I don't think you listen to hip-hop, not that that matters, but there is plenty of original thinking, lyric, delivery and musical content amongst the groups I cited and dozens of others. You'll probably think this is criticism of you personally, but it's not, everyone likes what they like.

Why dismiss a genre as limited and just loops and samples, when it's not jams, with actual musicians playing live instruments behind a very socially conscious rapper, they are better than most. But still not something I'd listen to every day. There's no melody, very little development, no singing, and no playing that makes my skin tingle. It doesn't suck but it doesn't climb the musical mountain to a really stunning view.

There's room in the world for a lot of different tastes. So enjoy what you dig but don't be surprised if other people simply don't dig it.

Hehe ,

The laugh is for "poor" DJ who sold his Paris rig (I got one of his adat cards thanks DJ) when he could not have two adat cards on single mec under XP...

Well I just hooked it up on my third mec along with another adat card (total two adat cards on same mec) and no other cards.

One thing for sure is two adat cards work at least without any in and out cards.

I have put the first adat card on slot 6 and the other on slot 4.

Jamie I never asked anyone to be amazed. I just don't understand the overly simplistic rap is just samples and loops bit.

For example, i'm not a fan of symphonic death metal. I think that the use of large scale symphonic sample libraries is a cheap demeaning cheat to real orchestra players, conductors and composers who have spent their lives honing their skills and applying their craft. These symphonic death metal guys come along with huge oversized midi rigs, gigantic over-powered computers with massive amounts of RAM, and ham fistedly thrust away at their touch sensitive keyboards in a frenzy of melodramatic hair brained insanity, stopping only to print out scores they never wrote (and definitely can't read) to impress their symphonic death metal groupies.

It makes me sick to my stomache, not only for the appalling lack of musicianship, but for the atrocious misunderstanding of the nature of death, and the very idea that they can sufficiently illuminate the twin realities of lifelessness and the void using the self-limiting vocabulary of symphonic death metal. If you read the last 2 or 3 lines, you'll note that his sayonara is to PC's, not Windows; despite the title of the article.

How would you guys go about getting those intimate sounding vocals with = lots of bass...low end in them.

Genre like you would hear Sinatra or Dino sing.

Like Christmas carols.

Kind of like a radio announcer voice but singing.

I heard a CD that was Christmas songs and there was this type of song.

I just like the intimacy and low end.

I have not been able to achieve this before.

Obviously lots of processing, but it doesn't really sound overly = processed.

Am I correct in assuming these two cards are in your third MEC?

And which position is this MEC in your Paris setup A, B or C

Also, stand back 1 foot from the mic and crank up the gain into the mixer.

 Like major compression on the lower register.
 You really hear the smooth low end of the male vocalist.

That's a U-47, baby!

NeilThe crooner sound is all about the great proximity effect from a figure-8 ribbon mic.

>Hi Dimitrios,

I did have two ADAT cards and an A8iT and A8oT working in one MEC running XP, but couldn't get 2 ADAT cards working in more than one MEC. Good luck to you getting this happening though. If you do, be careful to never disconnect the word clock from the MECs. I know of one Parasite who actually had 2 x ADAT cards working in 4 x MECs, but then he unhooked this WC cables during some maintenance or other and when he rebooted the system, he could never get them all working again, at least last time I talked to him.

Great that you have this happening. Good luck. If anyone can figure this out

See now you are just trying to get me going, cause if there's anything I like less than symphonic death metal, it's proto weenie beat butchers like Hork Bag.

ChuckTrue. I wouldn't choose XP as a boot OS but maybe Linux. It'd also be nice to have the option of running OSX on homebrew boxes. Still, the current situation is compelling enough to attract the guy who wrote the article, and probably some number of others who, for whatever reasons, aren't attracted to Vista and are looking for an alternative.

the music not as a death (as in real life) but more in a comic book / Alice Cooper context. It is not real, it's a fantasy land for this genre' - although there are always idiots out there that don't understand and take it WAY too far...
As to the orchestral part of it, it's an extension, in my experiences, of the limitations of being tuned down and very heavily distorted. Sort of like when they kick an ac gtr piece out, only an extension of this thinking. It's an expanded view of their skills I have found, and that's pretty cool. Most of (note, I said -most-) the death metal guys I've worked with/around are quite thoughtful and intelligent. Sadly, much more so than the bible belt free riding idiots from religious groups I have in the past had to deal with.

FWIW anyway. I'm of the mind that you get it being a PK but if not I hope I've only illuminated and not offended.

Probably the VSL2020 card.

If you don't want it I'll take it. I don't think it's supported anymore so drivers may be suspect and obviously limited to WinXP or older versions of OSX.

I think osx is a very compelling alternative to vista, in fact it's so compelling that i am starting to view it as vista is a lukewarm alternative to osx.

It is entirely plausible for me to run osx as my primary boot (it runs cubase fine) and run XP and linux as VMs.

I've got an RNC here that I've got routed through Jensen 1:1 balancing transformers. I'm routing the main group outs to the RNC set to really nice mode, then patching into the Neve. Man, what an attitude on the mix bus.

As soon as I can get around to it I'll do a bounce and post it somewhere.

I'll bet UAD could create a nuice tape emulation plugin if they put their minds to it. Users over on that forum have been requesting one for 5 years.

I like both the DGS-4/1 <http://www.gotham.ch/gac/gacindex.htm> and the GAC-4/1 <http://www.gotham.ch/gac/gacindex.htm>. I have used the GAC in high RF environments (my old studio was right down the road from a bunch of broadcast towers) with old mics that were actually picking up radio signals when using cheap Horizon cables. The GAC put a stop to it. I'd not hesitate to use any of their mic cables, but those two are ones I've had experience with personally. I've got Mogami cables here as well. they are very nice and a bit easier to find than Gotham in retail stores.

Dimitrios,

I'm trying to build a website to host my music -where listeners can playback my tunes. I like the way the myspace and soundclick sites mp3 players work, (click on a tune and it pretty much starts playing back right off) but I can't seem to find code that will allow me to achieve similar results on my own site. I could go to myspace or soundclick, but I'd prefer not. I found some code on a site by an O'Rielly guy, but its not quite right. Any ideas on how to handle this?

Hats off,

-----=_NextPart_000_0016_01C74CEF.0A53B060--Hi All

When setting up a 2 track buss for slamming drums (to mix with the original tracks) how do YOU go about it.

For Example

1) Do you use the whole drum kit (EQ'd) or just selected drum tracks - and if you use the whole kit do you set up a separate mix for the compressors (i.e. levels) and how would that mix differ from the regular drum mix (generally speaking)

2) If you require EQ on this mix buss to the Compressors - do you do it pre or post the compressors.

3) How do you deal with phasing issue

4) What settings on the compressor do you use i.e. attack, release comp ratio etc...or do you have a general guideline you follow

5) Lastly what are you looking to hear with this blend of tracks

OH COME ON!!!

What exactly did you record & evalute in that short time ("tonight")?

Also, do you have enough tracks going to make a difference? I don't know that you hear much of a difference on a small handful of tracks like a single acoustic guitar & voice, for example, but when you get even 10 or 12 tracks going and ESPECIALLY when you start throwing them through a verb or two working at those higher samplerates - you will absolutely hear a difference in quality.

It's not a large project to be sure. I use outboard 'verbs (or two) and = these will either have to be SRC'ed in real time (I've already concocted = the madness to accomplish this, though I'm not sure I want to do it) or = patched analog.....so I can't imagine a drastic improvement using = these. -----=_NextPart_000_0080_01C74CEC.B4425F70--I hear very little difference, but some. For instance, I do hear a difference between Mogami and Monster. Monster doesn't seem to have the same sweet top that Mogami does. My gotham mic cables sound very close to Mogami. I doubt any of this makes a huge difference until you've got, say 15 -20 mics recorded. I just know that with the Gotham, I'll not be bitten by having any RF problems, pretty much ever.

 > I haven't enjoyed a CD so much in I don't know when. I mean really, seriously enjoyed it...as in..it's gonna be in regular rotation around here. Extremely interesting lyrics, arrangements and killer musicianship.
 Sarah's voice has something unique about it that I really like. On Blow it All Up, it reminded me a little bit of Grace Slick at her best in the "White Rabbit" era, but I think Sarah's voice is more melodious. I'm not saying that this song is some kind of knockoff on another genre. It's not.
 It's refreshingly unique, as is all of the material on the CD.

Lots of really cool and interesting songs. There's not one song in there that I didn't like. That's pretty much unheard of for me.

;o) I think it depends greatly on the drummer and the drums. For instance, Yamaha notoriously IMO has a much more controlled sound/attack, whereas many of the Pearl kits I've recorded are pretty wild on attack. DW's record nicely generally, even the cheaper ones.
 Drummers... well, that's self explanatory I think.

If a part of the kit is wild, it's gonna get a compressor and/or limiter strapped to it. Thing to watch is keeping the phase aligned for all mics. If I have time, I'd prefer to automate each and every drum track over using a comp/limit, but many times a client wouldn't have that kind of cash so the fix is comp/limit.

How important are the Heat Spreaders?

thx\lbTried to send question to you early yesterday and a reply to your last email later last night and both bounced back

I had a Faderworks question regarding inputting ,atency values and I got the answer from the Company

DonHaven't been there in years man, I think that the last visit was around the time Chuck posted the VST Paris release.
And I don't miss that in my life one iota.

So far, the RAM seems to be humming along fine.

It did come with heat spreaders, and I guess they are a good thing. I might consider spending a LITTLE extra for them but not too much, provided you have decent case cooling.

It powers up, cabling is fine (tested this), but when PARIS boots up it tells

PARIS software seems to operate w/out it, so the EDS card seems ok - anyone got an idea about this? Is the MEC toast?

I sure love this system, but if i need a new MEC/24 bit I/O's, I think i www.kingtone.comDoing this live in real time has some advantages, but this method will work.

Do a drum only mixdown to two tracks.
Bring the mix in on two additional channels.
Compress it VERY heavy and bring a small amount up behind your main drum tracks.
You may need to shift this stereo track earlier to get the phase right. The amount of shift will be determined by what plugin you use for the compression.

high end boost post compressor. Personally I like less of the cymbals in the compressed mix and I generally use just a hint of the smashed track.

1176 in all button mode, Vintage Warmer, Compadre Beatpuncher all work well as will others. Settings vary. Start with a medium attack (10ms) a medium release (200ms) and a heavy ratio deep into the threshold.

sacrificing too much clarity.

Dimitrios has a method that works for doing this real time in Paris. You may want to search for his routing techniques. I typically do this by routing out to a second computer in real time. The only major advantage of real time is that you can adjust the individual send levels of your compressed drum mix as you work your overall mix.

Gene

P.S.

If you just want to add a little compressed energy to a drum mix rather than go with the "New York" smashed / parallel compressed sound, I would try Nebula2 free with the Boeing 747 settings. Nice!

I am sorry to hear about this.
I would check the power to the <EC and try it without the expansion cards.
I would check the cable. I would check the EDS card connector.
If you do determine that the MEC and 8in are toast...
And you decide to stay with PARIS... I have 1 of each available.
let me know and good luck.

Get a singer that sounds like Sinatra or Dino.

It's all in the voice modulation, not the recording.

>Hey guys,

I have posted before this technique with Paris eds compressor...

Here how it goes.

You open on your submixe's aux1 a stereo compressor and leaving threshold to 0 you use this just for dry signal.

On aux 2 you put another stereo eds compressor and you use this for heavy compression.

Now you select pre post on both Aux1 and Aux2 on all drum tracks and MUTE all drumtracks and then:

1) You control your dry drum levels from aux1 and

2) your wet (heavily compressed) drumtracks from aux 2.

No phase problems here as long as you use the same lookahead for both instances of eds compressor.

Have a nice day.

Regards,

Dimitrios

I drop in to see how they are doing/what they are up to and immediately get sucked in to some kind of negative vortex. It's like I grow horns and a ready to mix it up. It's disturbing, so I don't go unless I feel the need to get bummed out or spend a bunch of my energy being pissed off at someone for no good reason.

Very strange, my MEC seems to be generating some hum, like 60hz ground-problems stuff. Even when the thing is unplugged, I still get the hum. The only time it goes away is when I unplug the audio cables running from the monitor outs to the mix board. I hate to say it, but the cables are unbalanced instrument cables. Unplugged from the MEC, but still hooked into the board there is no hum, plugged back into the MEC -hum. Does this make sense -even when the power cord from the MEC is unplugged? The only thing I can think is to get some balanced cables, but if the cables (unplugged from the MEC) create no hum, will balanced cables solve the problem? I'm stumped --unless its some energy from the galactic core, washing over my home town and somehow tuned to the frequency of the MEC -now that would make at least SOME sense :-)

Thanks for any feedback,

I did indeed look at it.....and the fader control that goes with it. A very cool concept. I just don't know if I want to mix to stems if I don't have to right now. My projects here aren't of the massive track count variety. I've mixed a couple of projects of 60 + tracks in Paris when I was running 4 x MECs & 4 x EDS cards and I guess I'm just not pro enough to enjoy this. It really wasn't enjoyable to me for some reason. I'm gonna be working with a guy in this area in the near future named Ed Stasium. He's got a big PT rig and mixes large projects for a bunch of labels on the east coast so maybe after flying under his wing for a while I'll be more comfortable with the larger stuff, but the few projects I've been contacted about for mixing with large track counts, I've referred elsewhere because I felt like someone else could do a better job for the client. 50 tracks would be a huge situation here. 36-40 is on the high side but I can do a od job with this size mix. 24-32 is fairly typical and for bluegrass projects (which is what happens here a lot, 10-15 is pretty common) I've got 16 RME AD/DA's here. To integrate this box would necessitate my adding another 8 x channels so that I could continue to have my analog gear patched in as inserts during mixdown while stemming out 8 x stereo busses for summing through the Neve into yet another computer or a Masterlink.

Maybe later, as my situation evolves, I become more experienced and I have the clientele and larger track count projects to justify something like this.

Thanks for your insight on this.

;o)Don't cry!!!...just take that stuff I shipped you and make more music with it.

>Neil, your question is as confusing as your so-called daw mixing comparisions..

before you make any other comemnts on DAWs, get run out and get a version of PT-Mpowered. Import your wav files into a session..Push the faders up..And report your sonic findings..

Then, if you have copy of Paris, do the same..if you can...

Dude, I work with Nuendo daily. You cannot approach a mix on SX/NUendo he same way as on Pro Tools(anyversion) Paris Samplitude, Logic.. If you did, the mix would sart collasping. The summing stage get narrower, then have to add in a stereo imager..

My resolution was one that is being imployed by many other Neundo studio, and that by adding in a different summing stage. Beit a Digital Mixer, Analog mixer, Portco , Summ boxes..Etc.

Until then, your only reference is SX, and we all know how you have to mix with SX. If not, you're in for a long night...

The top end is really where a smearing or smoothing effect can help, imho.

I think the 5042 is a cool idea - thanks for passing it along DJ - I look forward to hearing some A/Bs!

The one I've got here is a loaner from a friend who might want to sell it. If I can't get it for substantially less than I could get it from an audio house, I may look at demoing other products as well to see what other toys could do the job as well. I may see if Morgan has access to these products and see if I can get some demo units out here. I know for sure that my old buddy Al Priest at Studio Tech Supply <http://www.studiotechsupply.com> carries this stuff.. I've dealt with him a lot over the years and he is always pretty heavily invested in demo units so lots of high end stuff is available for test drive. Morgan is just so good to work on every level with that I send my business that way if he can access the product without having to buy into a distributorship for a product that he wouldn't normally find profitable to carry.

cables plugged into the MEC when you try this? Is it in a metal rack? Your unwanted ground reference could be coming from other places than the power ground.

So-Called? Those weren't confusing for anyone but you - I've been trying to hint around in a nice way that you're full of shit, and seeing if you'll bow out of the argument for which you pose no sensible thoughts, but that doesn't seem to be working - so, now I've said in as plain a way as possible...
still confused?

session..Push the faders up..And Actually I may if you're that certain about it... Guitar Center's still open here... will you refund my money if I don't like it? Or wait, you HAVE all these DAW's, Mister Master of all DAW's individual sonic characteristics... why don't you throw up a mix done in each?

Anyway, are you saying that PT-M-Powered is DSP summing (or PTLE, for that matter)? 'Cause it ain't so.

>Until then, your only reference is SX,

'Fraid not, pally... in addition to Paris & SX, I've used Cakewalk (before it was Sonar), Magix (not Sam, never tried Sam), PTMix, PTLE, and PTHD, as well. My impressions of each, in that order, are: utterly useless, nothing special, sucks the big one, not all that bad, & very nice.

I happen to like SX quite a bit, I could probably live with PTLE if it weren't for the track count & i/o limitations, and I could definitely live with a full-out HD system, but I can't really justify that much of a cash outlay.

>and we all know how you have to mix with SX.

Personally, I'll bet you DIDN'T know how to mix in SX before I mapped it out here... not saying you never mixed with it, but you only had bad things to say about it - now you're an authority on "how to mix in it" - as a result of what? You parroting my own words, no doubt.

>If not, you're in for a long night...

If you use any tool in a manner in which you're not optimizing it, you're often in for a bad night.

You mock me for posting comparisons & examples of various stuff, which I've done for no other reason than to give people here a chance to hear summing example A vs. B, before they cough up a thousand bucks for a Pulsar card; or to have a chance to hear mic A, B & C through a preamp they don't happen to own. At least I put my mixes where my mouth is... everyone here has heard various stuff that I've done and they can judge for their own self if they like it/hate it/think it's the worst trash they ever heard... you, however, we hear nothing from except something your buddies mixed that you played on... you render an opinion, and just expect everyone to take your word for it, but you've presented nothing to back your word up.

You're coming across more like a giant parrot-headed troll every day.

NeilYou were not hinting at all.. It was plain to see. Most of the time I chose to ignore your lame ass comments, but not this time.

What arguments!! and your so-called Daw test with "trying to make sound like the other daw buy using a series of un related plugins.. That's a fair test?

It's stupid...!!

Did I make myself clear.. Punk ass

That's about the first thing you've spelled correctly in about seven years of posting.

NeilHi Dedric,

That's exactly what's going on. I don;t knwo if you guys have had achance to watch the DVD 'Mix It Sound Like a Record"..Highly recomended for ITB mixing.

Engineer Charles Dye uses a tape saturation plugins on the input stage and strap on the output stage.

He goes into great detail about why harmonmic distortion is the missing "Glue" to that Record Sound that we've been raised on..

Check out some excerpts.. <http://www.harddisklife.com> then click on the lower right side "saturation and the digital mix buss" button..

Just because I'm curious, and since the Grammy Awards are tonight, how many here are in the Producers & Engineers wing of the Recording Academy? AES?

As to 96k: I'm going to be upgrading my monitoring chain this year (Benchmark DAC-1 at least, and maybe some PMC monitors). That is of course if our car can stop being smashed up by car thieves in Texas. Gotta love humanity. I get the sense that my current chain (Audio Upgrades modified HD24XR and JBL LSR28p) are not revealing the benefits of 96k. Actually, I think it's more the speakers, but I'll do my best to find this out, budget willing.

-----=_NextPart_000_0047_01C74E91.875CD160--Hi Guys,

I have a nearly perfect Godley/Creme Gizmotron that I have had in storage forever. Used it once in the early '80's. It's the six string model. Anyone know what one of these is worth or where I might be able to find the value?
It's a real collectors item but I'm upgrading my stuff and can't afford collector's items if I want to get new toys.

Thanks Mucho,

JonIt's interesting. Ed is one reason I decided to try to simplify things. We were talking the other day and I was describing the studiomonster in it's (then) current incarnation and how I liked the Neve box. I won't go into the whole thing, but the gist of it was "if you think you can get that close to what you're liking about the giant behemouth you've created by using a little box, then lose the behemouth, buy the box"or something similar. I still had to test it for a few days before I drew a big breath and listed the Paris system for sale.

By the way - and I have stated this repeatedly, but you can't seem to get it through your addled mind - that particular test was simply a: "here are two versions, which one do you think sounds better?" test - it wasn't a trick, it wasn't a scam, it was as if you could drop yourself into two different cars going down the road, without knowing what kind of cars they were & being asked "which one drives better to your liking?"

Everyone seems to have gotten this except for you. The only reason I can guess is that you could in fact NOT tell any difference between the two - in which case it's not me you should be pissed at, it's your ears, or your monitors or whatever.

>It's stupid..!!

Again, you're the only one that thinks this - in that scenario you would must be right, and all the rest of us must be stupid... an unlikely outcome.

Neill just can't seem to get my head around simplicity, I guess. I've still got my native DAW here with Cubase 3 on it and all of my VSTi's. Most of these will operate in standalone mode. I also still have my Scope Luna card with 16 ADAT I/O and a S/Pdif I/O. I'm thinking of keeping it around as a farm system for lightpiping audio from VSTi's to Cubase SX. I'm also thinking of getting something like VStack to use as a VSTi host. I could even sync it via ADAT sync since I have the Scope Sync plate.

I'm just wondering.....it looks to me like I could even patch the Luna midi out to one of my RME midi inputs and record the midi direct to Cubase SX in real time simultaneously. then, if the two systems were synced gvia ADAT sync, I could patch the midi out of my RME card to the Luna midi input and use it as a sound generatorbut then I would have to monitor the incoming tracks in real time during a mix.....but if the buffers on both systems were the same, that should work, right?

How do you guys use farm systems? Just record the audio and be done with it? the point of this whole exercise would be to save resources on the DAW streaming audio, but as usual, I'm probably trying to snatch defeat from the jaws of victory.

;o)Can't you just use your VSTi's in stand-alone mode on that PC & drive 'em with MIDI coming off of your main DAW? Or if they all don't have stand-alone options, just open up Cubase v3 & insert them across various MIDI channels set to receive the corresponding MIDI channel(s) from your main DAW. SX3 wouldn't have to be running, it'd just be in "IDLE" mode.

Or would that not sync up properly with the streaming audio on the main machine?

Well, I guess that's as good as it gets and it's what I figured.
The reason this is relevant:
If you are planning to build a 'modern' computer and want to run the PARIS in that system, be sure to Google "PCI 2.2" and take note of the backwards-compatibility of 5 Volt KEYED Cards with PCI 2.1, 2.2, 2.3, and now the final revision 3.0.
Otherwise, you'll prolly end up fusing your new Mobo!
And no, no - this did NOT happen to me, I did my research first to avoid this.
Oh, and thank you to Aaron Allen and Don Nafe for responding to my first

> Oh, and thank you to Aaron Allen and Don Nafe for responding to my first > post and trying to help!The thing is - I've never been 100% sold on "the record sound" - some aspects are good, but to me it usually sounds like a creative approximation of what a band sounds like, rather than an uncanny representation. Glue is fine creatively, but it doesn't exist in the real world, which is what recording was original intended to capture.

Imho, because of the stargazing factor among engineers (copy the "hitmakers"), what used to be a limitation in the goal of reproducing a performance (noise, nonlinear phase, crosstalk, saturation, harmonic distortion) has become a vintage fad.

I say use what works creatively, but not because it's "that sound" or someone says you need it, but because "that sound" happens to be the one you personally want to make a specific recording more enjoyable. Let's keep the creativity in art rather than trying to duplicate what xyz famous engineer did. Certainly learn new techniques, but also learn the real reasons behind them - including knowing when these happen by intent, by default, by accident, or simply by limitation (i.e. because there was no other option).

Imho, the best people in any field seek to find the source and very dna of any accepted concepts or rules, and in their quest to improve, expand and even reinvent the bounds of their craft, proceed to break them judiciously, untethered by the chains of desire for fame or fortune.

Dedric

Anyway, now I am getting the failure to load Paris engine, error 1/1, which as far as I can find out means that Paris is not finding the scherzo driver. There are no conflicts showing in device manager, and the scherzo is listed in System Devices as "working." Video card (G400 matrox) is on an irq by itself. Anyone have any hints as to what I can try?DJ - I run Kontakt 2 (and others at times - Absynth, Reaktor, etc) separately via Midi Over Lan (all are on a Gigabit ethernet), with audio between RME interfaces, locked to the master system's word clock (another option for multiple VSTis is VStack, rather than burning a copy of Cubase for hosting alone).

You may already know and have tried this, but with Nuendo/Cubase, there are external instruments in the Control Room/Studio setup that allow you to assign midi devices, and audio inputs to any external device, including a farm PC. I have 4 stereo inputs and 64 midi channels to a farm PC, and that routes via Totalmix/lightpipe back to the main PC. The advantage of offloading that much processing is that I can run both PCs at low latency. External instruments are then opened in the VSTi list (under "External") as if they were VSTis.

When mixing down with external instruments, the bounce will run real time since it is including outboard audio, but will include the external instruments in the mix as live inputs, without having to track them down first (of course those external instrument channels are like any other - you can add plugins, route them to groups, etc).

Very, very cool.

Your experience and contributions aside, which I've thanked you for repeatedly, this is a really inappropriate and offensive response to LaMont's opinions.

Why would you take personally, the comments someone else makes about a piece of software written by people half way around the world, who have nothing to do with you?

Everyone saw your repeated put downs of LaMont. To his credit, he ignored them.

As far as LaMont being the only one who "didn't get" your tests, I'm pretty sure there were others who Q'd you on them too.

As far as commenting on LaMont's spelling - pathetic. It makes you look silly, or if it was a joke, it was bad. Either way, it sucks.

As far as the whole Native mix/buss thing goes, my experience generally leads me to share LaMont's opinions. I've worked with only a few of the DAWS - Paris, CuBase/Nuendo, Logic, Sonar and PT (up to Mix). The integrated ones have always sounded better to me. I do not like CuBase/Nuendo. I have heard many CuBase/Nuendo mixes, both in the studio and on all my usual playback systems, done by very good engineers, and they are _always_ lacking to my ears (so far) unless they have been sent OTB at some point.

All LaMont is saying is what the _audio community at large_ is saying right now.

Why do you think there is such a selection of Summing/Line mixing/Tape emulating products out there???

The assertion that all DAWS sound the same when a file is dropped in with no pan, gain, dynamic or EQ changes is virtually meaningless in a real world setting, since none of us would even use a DAW if we weren't going to manipulate pan, gain, dynamics and EQ (and time).

What does "better" mean? Remember Audio 101? "Stereo" means 3 dimensional.
Aside from transient and frequency response, and distortion issues, the ability to present audio material across 3 axes is what makes the difference to me.

I just got a project in here that a guy had recorded to a 4 track Teac 20 years ago.
He repeatedly bounced down to VHS to get his overdubs (!) It sounds awesome.
(Can't stand the tunes themselves, but...) As my wife says, it just seems to jump out at you.

3 dimensionality cannot currently be quantified. Please don't say that since we can't currently measure it, it must not exist. Yes, yes I know that the audiophiles have a well earned "crack" reputation for the commercially driven audio voodoo they sometimes espouse, but lab based assertions without the admission that we, at this time, don't know it all, are vain. Right now we measure amplitude, Freq and x-y axis
I fully expect that we'll be able to quantify 3 dimensionality in the future as well.

To my ears, CuBase/Nuendo, without sending something OTB at some point in the mixing/mastering chain, just does not cut it. It lacks the punch, the glue,
the realism, the 3 dimensionality that music needs to communicate at the highest level.

So what if I think this? So what if LaMont does too?

Peace,

Respectfully,

Ted

you can't mix in Nuendo", "you have to use OTB summing to get a good mix", or "you need to get your ears checked if you can't hear what I do" as if other posters need convincing or converting for some reason.

Making absolute statements isn't really being objective, and that's a basic requirement of any A/B comparison debate - objectivity.

If you are going to make absolute statements, please provide audible proof, otherwise, qualify your comments with "to me, this sounds like...", or "in my opinion...", or "I prefer...", and leave it at that.

Differing opinions are fine, and you don't have to prove your opinion to have a right to it. But, questioning the skills of other posters to back up your opinion isn't a credible response.

There are a wide range of opinions on this debate at all levels, so that's probably the only point we all need to agree on.
