current UPS to detect. In this case, an "online" UPS may be necessary.

The difference is that an "online" unit provides power from the battery 100% of the time compared to a "standby" unit that kicks in a power inverter when a brown or blackout condition is detected. Online units are more expensive though.

Hope this helps!

Thanks for the vibes on the NG-If you want to know what CD's I've used Paris on got to AllMusic.com-all of my productions are there.

Start with 1999 and go from there-I'll post my config the next time I open towers and two subs for the third tower. That night there were multiple acts, from solo acoustic to loud prog rock bands, with quick changes.

Paris

Overall they worked and sounded better than I expected and the act changes were fairly quick.

No mixer out front. The owner of two of the towers was on hand to adjust things as needed on the little control modules.

There wasn't time to do much with the acoustic drums so I don't really know how good or bad the PAS can be for that. I think the drums were mostly un-amplified that night. The bass guitar and low keyboards sounded good so there was some bass response in the system.

There were a few initial feedback problems due to volume. B
