DJ,

I have old Wavelab 3 and it only works with 16 bit pafs. It's also in another computer. I don't think it will be my best option.

Tom

Tom,

If you've got Wavelab, just render the .paf's so that they all have = a 00:00 starting point, then batch process them as .wavs in WL. I do = this over a gigabit LAN network with the destination set to the audio = file of a corresponding Cubase project and then they are ready to import = to the Cubase project when I open it up. Very smooth procedure.

I have a jazz session coming up and the producer wants to mix on Cubase at his place if my two mix isn't all there. We are=20 recording all tracks live here to Paris multitrack. We'll be at = 24 bit=20 and don't expect overdubs. I think all tracks will automatically = line up right?

What do you use to convert 24bit .pafs to 24bit .wavs for Cubase = 3.0?

Thanks for your suggestions as always!

Tom
