jeeeezzzzz.....look at my spelling...

Dyslexics..UNTIE!!!"The bush's are just helping them and appointing their people to all of those positions you speak of. Funny thing is, they have even gotten in to china, but they haven't been able to control the arab countries of the middle east. These people are never happy unless they are taking advantage of some body. I'm not going to say who these people are but you can find them through out world history."

When I read intentionally vague stuff like this, I start to think that you are referring to [JEWS]. Of course everyone knows that [JEWS] rule the world, pulling the puppet strings from behind the scenes, hording capital, and sucking the life out of innocent communities with their rapier sharp, blood sucking vampire teeth.

In DC it's impossible to walk down the street without a [JEW] trying to lend me money at usorious rates, so I TOTALLY GET IT. If only someone could come up with a viable plan to eradicate the [JEWS]!

>Hi Neil,

There are times I will be playing around midi editor (piano scroller) and the program will just stop passing audio (requiring not just closing the project, but also closing the program). Also, sometimes when using BFD, the system will just freeze up. this never happened in CSX3 and doesn't happen on my slave box with VStack. When relaunching the program, the VST I/O settings for the external FX are scrambled, requiring repatching. Also, I have also named my outboard gear in the "favorites" menu, but somehow this got duplicated and now, when I launch Cubase, the I/O that was assigned to these processors shows up split between one or the other duplicate group. If the wrong duplicate is instantiated by Cubase 4, the, of course, audio is muted for that channel, requiring me to do a lot of troubleshooting every time I open a project. Cubase will not allow me to delete the duplicate external gear names.

There are some things about C4 that are very wrong.....at least here.

B) Our own Federal Trade Commission.

If you agree with the GAO that industry consolidation is hurting rather than helping the consumer at the pump, then something is wrong over at the FTC. The FTC is our consumer protection watchdog, they oversee and approves mergers and they enforce anti-trust legislation. Is the fox guarding the hen house?

C) Our own government.

We have problems using long term planning to avoid situations where our security is at risk from poor energy policy. This is a failure of leadership by both major parties.

How do we get better leadership? Is it by electing politicians who represent multi-national industries? Or is it by electing politicians who represent their actual constituents?

If you believe in the latter, i.e. "democracy," the election system is broken on several fronts.

First, the increasing amount of money it takes to get elected means that most politicians butter their bread from high money sources, because that's the easy money. K street lobbyists are funneling vast sums of money to both parties in order to push special interest agendas. This results in politicians who are beholden to special interest groups for their jobs. Lobbyists themselves are helping to write new legislation and are even being appointed to government oversight positions.

This will not be easy to reign in. Possible solutions include:

-Using some amount of the public airwaves for elections without charge, to make running for office less costly and thus level the playing field for candidates who don't feed at the lobbyist trough;

-Instant runoff voting so people can vote for their true favorite candidates without fear of throwing their vote away;

-Full disclosure laws for groups doing political advertising (including those doing thinly veiled "issue advertising"), so everyone knows exactly which special interests are behind any disinformation campaign;

-A responsible fourth estate that shines a bright light on ad campaigns, showing the funding sources, revealing their interests, and contrasting any claims with actual facts. We need to balance a special interest group's right to brazenly lie with the public's need to know the facts. :^)

-Campaign finance reform. This is an interesting challenge: how to keep an election from being bought without infringing on "free speech." Free speech is in quotes because there is some controversy about whether restricting campaign donations is the same as restricting actual speech.

Second, the election mechanism itself is suspect. A large percentage of the votes are compiled by computer-based systems that do not keep a physical record of the vote. There is no way of knowing if the electronic vote has been hacked, except that 1) we know electronic voting makes it possible to cheat quickly, undetectably and on a large scale, and 2) we have a clear history of various parties eagerly cheating in elections when possible. Draw your own conclusions.

Even with systems that keep a physical, recountable record, it's important that the ballot of record be the physical representation and not the electronic representation. The physical representation should be counted for the first official tally as well as all recounts. It's exceedingly important that vote tallies are regularly audited using the physical ballots, with a sufficient percentage of precincts audited to be very sure that no cheating falls through the cracks.

On the other side of the equation, no party should be allowed to manipulate the federal system to throw legitimate voters off the rolls or fail to count any legitimate ballot, provisional or direct. Nor should dead people vote.

Cheers,
-Jamie

PS. James, you also raised another issue, that of the arms industry, in which we are a dominant player. I won't go into it here except to note that one of the objections you raise about Venezuela is that they are buying from a competitor.

;o)I saw that a couple of years ago. I hope something happens soon. I think the oil companies will keep this from happening, besides if it did we'd be paying a hundred dollars for a quart of oil. We'd quickly see their supply and demand excuse, is a farce.

Funny how no one seems to remember the great failed experiment called socialism (USSR, anyone?) Or better yet, the great failed experiment called facism (Nazi Germany, anyone?)

The irony is stifling that people seem to forget these things on Memorial Day weekend...either grossly insensitive, totally out of touch with reality on this planet, or some combination therein, I would imagine.

Now that was funny, LOL!When I was growing up, a friend's family had 4 or 5 Danes and in the winter they used to feed them in a room off the kitchen. After eating when they all started farting, it was literally a health risk to enter that room.

I'm impressed w/ Ron Paul too. (2 first names - doesn't that automatically make him a star?) He recently was involved in creating legislation to prevent federal funds from being used for mandatory mental health screening. Just imagine "One flew over the cuckoo's nest" for the whole country.

Here's another perspective

http://www.groupsrv.com/science/about156295.html

this partiular post caught my eye:

>HHO is total and utter bullshit, caused by gross incompetence of the=20
purported researchers.=20

There is no difference whatsoever in any way shape or from between=20
Brown's Gas and a standard stoichiometric mix of normal hydrogen and=20 oxygen.=20

The energy density of normal hydrogen by volume is 2.7 watthours per STP = liter electrically recoverable or 3.3 watthours total available. This=20 compares to gasoline at 9000 wh/l.=20

The energy density of normal hydrogen by weight is meaningless for=20 terrestral apps, because any CONTAINED hydrogen energy density is MUCH=20
LESS than gasoline.=20

See http://tinaja.com/glib/muse120.pdf for an accurate and detailed=20 analysis of the Brown's Gas ludicrosity.=20

BUT -- Credible peer reviewed mainstream research shows that modest (5%) = injection of hydrogen into a conventional ICE can in fact produce=20 significant improvements in performance and pollution reduction. The=20 huge Gotcha is whether any new engine loads, compatibility with other=20 new ICE developments, and per-mile amortization costs can allow a net=20 benefit.=20

Anything involving on-board electrolysis certainly can not. Per=20 http://www.tinaja.com/glib/muse153.pdf=20

Anything involving an ordinary fan belt certainly can not. Per=20
http://www.tinaja.com/whtnu06.asp and earlier.=20
