hoops!

Did you forget the times I said that the ideas are those of God?

Is that unimportant to you? If we both see Hulk Hogan at an autograph signing, and you claim he was wearing the yellow shirt, and I write he was wearing the red, does this mean that there is no Hulk Hogan?

>Asking as a non-believer, which of you Christians should I listen to?

We all agree on how you can be saved. You do not believe in such things. There is your problem.

Clever. Still, you have to decide this for yourself. Are you here to debate, or do you care about which is right? Do you believe in the possibility of rightness? Of God?

No, they are verbal and historical issues that you use to dismiss the content.

The Jews are still looking for messiah. Or are atheists.
Could they have missed him? Just a thought.

Hindus? I am not convinced. Are you?

I notice you left off the buddhists.. Of course, no God...

That leaves us with 2 things.

Make up your own beliefs or

Jesus Christ.

I made my choice.

Clever. Substance-free, but clever.

Doug, let's give this NG a break OK? This is clearly pointless.

No. I imagine you will grow comfortable with your beliefs being dismissed with a wave of the naturalist hand.

As are choices to buy gasoline. That does not mean that gas pumps are a myth created by man to comfort himself.

DCHi Don,
I responded to you on the 13th.
I assume you didn't get?

That comes across to me as a quite flippant answer. I truly believe that I am asking legitimate questions, and I do not always believe that I receive legitimate answers...

> That's hilarious... Your atheist assumptions are as clear as > can be aren't they? Any view of history that includes Christ

Again, this seems rather flippant to me. I have already told you that I am not an atheist. Being scholarly is not exclusionary to any reality. Some Christians are offended by the term CE - hence my advice...

> Of course, the opposite of atheist is not Christian, it is theist...

Sure, as the opposite of agnostic is gnostic...

> Looks like you have a few more on the other side than you thought.

Ummm, not sure what you mean by that... Would you please rephrase that?

> The belief that only the natural world, as we understand it,

Have I ever argued for "the natural world" being real at all?

> It is an act of faith that "science" as we know it, can

What have I said to you that implies that I think science has anything to do with religion? (Unless you consider "thinking" to be a science? I don't think ;-) thinking is a science...)

> "Any sufficiently advanced technology is indistinguishable from

Cool quote.

> Which is it? How do you differentiate between atheism and > agnosticism?

Well, there's strong atheism which believes that there is NO deity, and there is weak atheism that assumes there is no deity but admits to a lack of knowledge about deities. This is orthogonal to agnosticism, which believes there is a deity, but doesn't know the details. Of course, we should then add on a discussion of the term gnostic, which is about direct knowing. Gnosis differs from the Orthodoxy in the sense that (in my words) the Orthodoxy seems to believe that it is not possible for the individual to know things at the same level that Jesus knew them...

Is that a flippant answer or a legitimate one?

:-) I'll let you know when/if I find enlightenment...

I was raised in the Unitarian/Universalist environment and still hold many of the beliefs, if that's what you're asking.

I do not deny the existence of God.

Rather Quixotic, wouldn't you think? I don't believe I have that same issue...

> The first was the day I realized, from years of study and reading, Darwin was searching for an explanation for something. With the evidence he had, I think he did a mighty fine job. Does it answer my questions about the world? No. Does it answer my questions about God?

Of course not. I don't even consider Darwin when I think about religion...

I'm glad that resonates with you. Many people feel the same about the words and thoughts of the Buddha. Many believe the same about Mohammed, and many feel the same about Joseph Smith...

> Rubbish Doug. I was running out the door to a birthday party.
> I did answer you. Did you see it?

I did indeed, and I see that you have replied to it. Thank you. I must run out the door myself, so I'll read and reply to that one later.

Is this supposed to be some kind of guilt trip you're laying on him?

I readily admit that my views are sometimes in disagreement with ORTHODOX Christianity.

> You do not answer to me.

True. And yet you throw that at me as if you are morally superior?
