Hmmmm.....I don't think there's much doubt that when man overpopulates an area, everything, including man, suffers in a pretty big way.

Well how do you know, really? You just believe

Having inhabited this place for well over half a century, I can go back to places that I knew 40 years ago and look at what has happened since then and see it for myself.

Agreed. I believe in the 2nd amendment. Some jerk breaks into my place and he's toast. Plain and simple. I also believe that we should allocate a few thousand square miles of some national forest for the trophy hunters. A pair of them would be allocated 10 square miles and they would be required to hunt each other. The corpse of the loser is then shipped to a taxidermist to be mounted for the hunters trophy room and now that he (or she) has proved that they can point and shoot, the survivor's gun would be forfeit for the remainder of the hunt and they would then receive a hunting license that would entitle them to a knife and two weeks to build their own weapon from whatever resources that might be handy in order for them to attempt to hunt and kill an animal with their contraption so they could further assert their manliness.

;o)Did I miss something? Was the 2nd Amendment repealed? I mean, you guys still have your guns, right? And, has Clancy suddenly turned into something other than a highly successful writer of fiction? Maybe a more pertinent piece of contemporary fiction would be "The Road" by Cormac MacCarthy -- there's a cheerful view of the post-apocalyptic future for ya...
