it's pretty much the same as long as you have a decent set of speakers on your TV. It's got a bump in the lows/low-mids, and there's a slight high-end sheen that could even be described as a very mild "sizzle" (but not too much). The other people on his show don't sound like that, so it's him or his particular signal chain, or a combination of the two. The lower end of his tone isn't all about proximity effect, either, because even when he's not right on top of the mic, you still hear that "thing" I'm talking about.

Your thoughts?

e little guy. I know my local guy is as busy as can be=20 and he's a wealth of information. Worth a lot to me for sure and = he's...=20
local. His name is... Hung. Does it get any better than that?
