>During boot up does your bios show you what IRQ's it is assigning to your card? It might say "multimedia device" or something like that. There's no routine, you can put as many eds cards in as long as EVERY slot you put them in is not shared with other devices. If the slot is shared with stuff like onboard audio, usb etc turn them off in the bios to free the slot from IRQ conflicts if you will be using that slot.

If you can see irq info on bootup you can try each slot and see what comes up as shared. Also, run msinfo32.exe from Start / Run and see what IRQs are doing what under Hardware.

It's all about the god damn irqs !!!

Hehe. It's not me dude. I don't mind at all. :o)

It's just that I know many others do...

Personally I'm just wishing I wasn't moderator, because then I'd join in...

....not that I've ever deleted a post, except one, but you know what I mean.
;o)

Cheers,
Kim.I may have a builder for you if you need one.

Someone out there must know enough about the Paris architecture to know whether or not this is possible.
OK, I'll just go back to dreaming now...
