. Ended up going back and being replaced by a Soundcraft fully analog deal. Hopefully they've worked out that problem by now.

- a.. 30-in, 34-out audio/MIDI interface with 12 Onyx preamps
- a.. Two instrument inputs
- a.. Eight balanced line outputs

- a.. Dual stereo control room outputs
- a.. Four independent headphone outputs
- a.. S/PDIF and AES/EBU I/O
- a.. Dual ADAT I/O
- a.. Two FireWire ports
- a.. Includes Tracktion 2 and Final Mix software

The key words I don't see here are works with 3rd party apps, latency free hardware monitoring, warranty coverage and period and ASIO.. or even a minimum host computer recommendation. Mac? PC? minimum RAM/Hard Drive/CPU/Firewire port spec?

Surely some or all of that is at the Mackie.com site, but stinkwater hasn't done a very good job of translating that info to potential buyers.

I'd also recommend doing some research on the firewire interface... if it's DICE, then it's nothing special and you can expect normalcy in it's latent behaviour (that means, a cheapo tascam/M Audio unit will likely be just as fast, or maybe faster, since it's got less traffic because of less channels). This is why (Chris Ludwig... correct me if I'm off here man) a RME firewire will kill the run-of-the-mill FW interfaces in latency times.

I'm not really keen on some of his stated policies, but rhetoric is usually tempered by hard realities, especially when it comes to economics. Corporations are evil, etc., etc.....yeah, but small corporations employ the majority of people in this country, and with the exception of government and public education (pretty much the same thing), large corporations employ the rest. Tax them in a non-profit mode and you've shut the economy down. Barak is smart. Real smart. What I'm really, really afraid of is that some racially motivated white whacko maniac will kill him or some foreign power will kill him and stage it to look like some racially motivated white whacko maniac killed him....and as totally surreal and incredibly evil that scenario is, it's a credible one.

The ultimate in lawsuit insanity.

The people of the US should sue these individuals and their lawyers for the cost of our tax dollars wasted in these ridiculous lawsuits. That amount alone could likely have built them all nice homes wherever they want to live. More entitlement welfare system thinking. This is what happens when a handout becomes a standard, rather than a hand up with a time limit and stipulations attached to it (like say, drug testing and actually looking for work?)

I wonder too, could we as a people of the US claim a countersuit based on greed, stupidity and wrongful suit - you know, since it's actually money paid in taxes by the working class. Perhaps wrongful death since they'd kill the economy in shortsightedness, blinded by the 'me me' thinking.

Well, the illegal aliens would likely find a politician to trade that fund for votes anyway, so it's probably a moot point.

Hang the lawyers.

(grrr....)

Probably won't have much real world impact but I'd love all that FPU processing for audio apps.

TCBNo shit, my man! The biggest problem this country faces today is not terrorism and it really never was. It may sound cold-hearted, but we only lost a few thousand people and some tall buildings. In the big picture that's fairly small potatoes. We lose that many every 4 days from mis-prescribed pharmaceuticals and every month in highway deaths. If we really want to save lives there ought to be "wars against" those mistakes.

Our biggest problem right now is we are spending way more than we have, both individually and in the government. The dollar is crashing hard because the rest of the world now has an alternative in the Euro and they know our Fed Reserve just keeps on printing new dollars every time they feel like having an extra juicy profit. The citizens won't take the government to task for overspending because they are doing the same damn thing! Getting a new credit card is equivalent to the Fed printing up more money.

We have to fix this, but the majority of candidates don't dare bring it up because it is sure to be poorly received by the electorate. Fox News was evidently afraid to have Ron Paul in the last debate because he was likely to shove his take-action-now fiscal viewpoint into the other candidates faces, and they wouldn't know what to say - they think the public is way too stupid to put future survival above their immediate desires.

We gotta wake up NOW.

There is a lot that happens in life that isn't fair and no human being has any control over.

We can't sue everytime there isn't someone there to make everything okay for us. Sure, there were bad situations, in New Orleans but there have been a lot of similar or worse situations in smaller scales that no one even blinks an eye at, or files a lawsuit for.

People like this would never survive a real national disaster where the whole economic, communications and/or transportation system collapsed.

Not one nickel...

<http://www.popularmechanics.com/science/earth/2315076.html>

DCHere's an example from the site;

MYTH: "The aftermath of Katrina will go down as one of the worst abandonments of Americans on American soil ever in U.S. history."--Aaron Broussard, president, Jefferson Parish, La., Meet the Press, NBC, Sept. 4, 2005

REALITY: Bumbling by top disaster-management officials fueled a perception of general inaction, one that was compounded by impassioned news anchors. In fact, the response to Hurricane Katrina was by far the largest--and fastest-rescue effort in U.S. history, with nearly 100,000 emergency personnel arriving on the scene within three days of the storm's landfall. Scary stuff. I would like to think that there will be adequate protection... There are always crazies out there.

Of course - but care to take a guess as to how much tax money will go into 489,000 court cases? $100M? $300M? I was referring to public opinion, and to some degree, given the numbers, how much more scrutiny may be put into a defense that would set a precedent for other claims.

Not sure I follow a specific point here (other than public opinion marring - yes, agreed, they've likely already tanked their sympathy card); but if the revisionist history idea is that some plaintiffs may be using selective memory to fuel their vengeance, and the absurdity of the numbers will jade the public into forgetting any valid concerns, then I agree.

I still think suing anyone because your house was flooded in a major flood zone with a near ground level water table, in the midst of a major hurricane borders on a single digit IQ.

I just think personally looking at a levee next to my neighborhood with water flowing above the level of my yard would run up a few common sense red flags - somewhat similar to living below Mt. Kilauea (no one does afaik) and watching lava flow past my house on a daily basis, wondering if I might have chosen a little safer location to inhabit before the ground starts shaking, instead of pointing toasty charcoal fingers after it's too late.

On that note, to prevent boring the rest of the ng, back to soldering cables, discussing candidates with only 2 initials, and wondering what NAMM and Mac World will bring. ;-)

Dedricls anyone using Windows 2000 successfully? If so, did you install the xp drivers? Thanks!Dedric Terry wrote:

No, what I mean is that people like you and me and everyone else who sits in armchair judgment of events like this will take what we hear and filter it through our own confirmation biases.

So some of us hear the news from Nawlins and say, "look, lazy shiftless, stupid people" and others will say "look, a huge failure of government letting down th
