And probably a Nvidia chipset or Via chipset. The boards that have 3 rd party chipset SATA , etc are the ones you normally need to check into to make sure they will have vista driver.

Sense AsRock is ASUS it would make sense if they some form of Vista drivers.

Yes the boards that have popular chip sets on them are lucky enough to have Vista compatibility.

The only compatible board still being made yes. Not sure why any motherboard maker would make new board based on chipset s that are EOL. The newer sockets and chip sets coming out for AMD stuff will have no backwards compatibility. UADs issues with those chip sets are nothing they can really do anything about. These are design flaws in the chip sets themselves. We tried ages ago when we first ran across the issue to find ways to make it work. There are also overall PCI performance issues on the Via chipset also. The Nforce 3 board works great with a single but with dual cores it's unpredictable. The Nforce 4 was pretty much useless over all for most any PCI audio device. NVidia strayed quite abit away from the PCI-e spec with the Nforce 4 so they could improve video/gaming performance. Of course this the vast majority of users and the Nforce 4 is an excellent gamer chip set.

The Nforce 3 chipset over all was better but dual-core support was not optimized in them. This the case with the Opteron motherboards like the Tyan 2885. With single cores the board work fine but with dual cores all kinds of weird stuff happens. The S2895 works better but like the S2885 it still has issues because of the AMD 8131 chipset used on hte PCI-x bus. The 8131 chipset had a bunch of design flaws and timing and buss sensitive devices like the UAD and even the TC power core especially the MK1 would suffer from abnormal cpus loads and drop outs. The 8132 chipset used on the Super Micro boards and the New Nvidia chi sets used on the F series work fine. The current Intel chip sets work fine but like AMD they do have to rely on the motherboard manufacturers to properly lay out a board and not cut corners.

This is the direction I'm headed..probably starting next week. I gotta have some more horsepower soon. Still, I'm pretty darned happy with the UAD-1/Magma route. A 13 slot Magma has 4 slots (#'s 1, 5, 7 & 11 on the newer boards with the round cable and slots # 1, 5, 8 & 12 on the older ones with the flat 80 pin ribbon cable) that will all share a single IRQ and if inserted in a mobo PCI slot that doesn't share IRQ with the AGP (or whatever other show stopper), they will function as a single PCI card on one driver/IRQ. I'm using two of the newer model 13 slot Magmas with 4 x UAD-1 cards in one and 3 x RME HDSP cards in the other. It's the most rock solid DAW I've ever built. I have also used a newer and older 13 slot Magma in this same scenario and they worked great together. Hope the Tyan S2915 will be the same. It won't be long until I start building this beast. I'm looking for deals on Socket F Opteron 2220's (2.8GHz per core) right now. They are quite a bit more than the 2218's (2.6GHz per core). A pair of 2218's can be had these days for around $575.00, and it looks like prices are starting to drop.

You posted a song a while back and said you were shopping a CD for Distb.

What ever happened with that?? You did a great job on the song!

-----=_NextPart_000_02A5_01C7961E.55E62580--heh yeah right !

I bought anothe dspfx card !

I have also found another two in my smalltown where I live !!!

That is so strange !!!

All over USA you cannot find it anywhere and I found two in my little town which is around 50.000 people !!

That is fate...

Thanks DJ,

Do you think that micro atx will save me anything ?

Is it worth it ?

Regards,

Dimitrios

Well I don't know what to do to reach a good distributor.
Morgan has sent the song to BrianT but nothing has come as an answer yet...
Thanks again for your concern.

put it on CDBaby, and opt to have them place it on iTunes, Rhapsody, all that stuff... if it's truly a hit, it'll get noticed & you'll be fielding proposals. That'll cost you like 30 bucks.

Or you could try Taxi - that's all they do is shop stuff, but that costs a couple hundred from what I hear.

ng different. I gave our recording guy my C16 and an adat feed from the Paris mix buss. He sat there during the gig with headphones and one hand on the C16.

Bingo. Waaayyyyyyyyy better recording.

Realized afterwards I could also put a little plate on the auxes and add some sweetening, which we will do next time.

So, it's time to rack up the MEC and the G4 (gonna throw in the 442 and IF-2 so I can get an extra 6 channels with one more EDS card) and take this on the road.

If I actually make some money at this, the wife will be much more amenable to toy purchases....

One question - two EDS cards, possibly 2 MEC's with 8in cards.

Aside from the EDS jumpers, can I g

-----=_NextPart_000_010F_01C79764.DB3584F0--Generally 240V stuff is rated at 220-250. Many Asian countries use 220, and even within Australia there are areas that use 250V. Indeed some country areas have 260V I think.

I'm still 95% sure the 442 doesn't require power, because i remember being surprised when i discovered it didn't and thinking "That's a worry. That's gonna suck a lot of juice out of my EDS"...

Could be wrong, but I'm pretty sure...

Cheers,
Kim.
