r bass guitar... Your 1947 banjo or flugelhorn would not fall into this category :D)

OK, now here's what I've got to offer. Everything's in Minty-Fresh or at least 99.5% minty fresh cosmetic condition unless specified, and all of it works to 100% performance, again, unless specified. For those who may not have used - or are not familiar with - the specific items mentioned, I have tried to provide as objective descriptions as possible - not sales pitches; that way you should know if it's something you're interested in, or not. Remember, I'm not DYING to get rid of any of this stuff, I'm just kinda "going fishing" here, so if you're going to offer something in trade, better make it interesting!!!:

1.) B.L.U.E. Bluberry - Freakin' Clean as hell class-A cardioid LDC which to my ears sounds very C-12-like on the high end in that thinly-bright, airy way, but cleaner on the mids, and with less proximity effect & "wooliness" (this, despite the fact that it's got a transformer in it!). Honestly, this super-clean lack of "wool" & proximity effect might be this mic's weakness, as whenever I've a/b'ed it with my Soundelux 251C, singers always opt for the 251C (kinda similar high end, but more proximity & "wool", and let's face it, lotsa singers like to hear that lo-mid harmonic distortion in their voices). It is NOT a super-warm mic, but it is also NOT like a TLM103 or a C-1; it's much smoother than both of those - maybe something like a 414B-XL, but with a lot more character? That might be another close description. Anyway, I just find I don't use it all that much for vocals, so it's Tyrone Thanks guys for all the info.

Tyrone,

The Babyface mod is a mod for the compressor, giving it a faster attack.

Basically it will make the compressor more usable.
