And what could you possibly dislike about the present Israeli leadership? Draggin settlers out by the scruff of the neck, responding to the worst terrorism with measured and rational responses, and showing great restraint. See, this is the problem with europe. In your arrogance, because of living in a land that cannot envision war, you assume all violence is failure, and that there must be a way to negotiate and finess this stuff.

at if we all were to meet somewhere, with no discussion of our personal politics, we would get along famously. Don't get me wrong, this kind of discourse is good. It helps us understand each other better, if even just a little. My wish is that we can all have these discussions, and even when they've been heated, at the end still be the great international community of PARIS people. That's it, the ICPP! Well, er...maybe a different acronym would be better. Anyway, I guess what I'm trying to say is that I respect you all, weather we share the same view or not.

its been real... my brain is about to go into standbyNot that every question can be "perfect" but if the outset of this test is to determine or assist in determining the political locale of an individual or group, "better" questions would be best whereas "imperfect" presumptuous ones, it could be said, are clandestine at worst, indiscriminate at best.

Case in point, when I tested, I found myself feeling a little tweaked that almost every question, for me, was answered with "disagree" when, in fact, changing or adding or subtracting just one word from the question could have and would have yielded an "agree" response to an identical question.

Is it therefore not implausible to think that the formulations of these questions intentionally poses an emotional sub-plot to cause a more liberal respondent to think or feel he is an agreeable person, to continue answering emotionally whereas, a more conservative thinker, by same questions, could reasonably be made to feel out of step and hi

>Kim,

In case you haven't been watching the threads... with the gigabyte motherboard, I sorted out all the issues in the end. I beleive there was a dodgy WinXP disk involved in most of my issues, and in the end I discovered that the board I got was faulty, as the SATA ports on the board died in the end, and it's now been taken back to the store for replacement.

But, in the middle there, I did get the thing running perfectly. I spent a weekend with Paris loaded with all my plugins, switching from project to project and playing different things, and she was running perfectly. Once I got everything properly loaded, I couldn't fault it.

So despite all the troubles I had, I'd still recommend this board. It's extremely quick, and seems capable of being extremely stable as well, so long as you use a working XP disk and don't get a faulty board. ;o)

Cheers,
Kim.

It was an "Ultra" wasn't it? There seem to be a few variants of this board, the differences between which I don't know.
