The other foam is going to go in a rack enclosure that houses the computer cases. I will have two computers in this iso box and I will remove both sides of the cases or pretty much all the un-needed computer case housing. I was considering placing a power supply on the iso box just to power the fans. Is there a good candidate for this purpose. A PS that won't add too much noise ad heat which will defeat its purpose? Any suggestions?

He started selling jingles (he is a musician, his wife a great singer) to those clients while he had them on the phone for radio ad time. Within a few months he started his own production company (not doing jingles anymore, but a successful company it seems).

We have a large well-known local production company here doing jingles dirt cheap - about what it would cost me to hire and record a couple of vocalists. Imho, it kind of killed the market here for the most part. Definitely not worth my time to try and compete with them. Oddly their hourly rates are some of the highest in town, if not the highest.

Erick,

I use an early version of Amplitube with Paris 3.0=20

Has anyone used Paris and IK Multimedia's Amplitube? I keep getting =

I am just going to put my audio comp in the enclosure so I will be able to get to it no problem. I will pull the door off of the case and lay it on its side so the heat raises straight up from the MB. I bought some case fans that I will be installing in the enclosure with there own power supply. I will be using 1"thick standard foam for the inside of the enclosure and the exhaust maze.

bYeah, I've done it a long time ago, but quit messing around with it, and it never has been much faster for me so I just gave up on it. Makes me want to ditch these adats and pick up a hard disk unit (at some point).

DeejIt has to do with not needing to worry about tracking as hot as possible to get the maximum number of bits. At 24 bit, you can just set your record levels a bit lower and still get plenty of resolution. You don't need to be riding just below redline.

Am I compromising resolution?

Should I be tracking at levels just below clipping?

The only we should be ready to face is the (Bush-ites) neo-cons aka the present rulers of our government. They are the ones who are taking away our liberties,freedom under the guise of democracy.

It's really ashame that the 33-36 percent of you who still believe i this regime, are still drinking the kool-iaid that Tony Snow spills. It's soo un-beliveable what they spew out these days to make their case. Now, it's become laughable.
Pretty pathetic that they continue to play the so called "RED-States fear rhetoric to get support for thier imperialistic movement.

The Bush(ite)popularity polls show them @ around 33-36 percent. That says that most of the folks who voted for him does not suppoort him or that "sham" Iraq war.

What's even funny is that folkd like yourself willing to die for this sham of a cause, when the President himself and other Elites, will never take up arms. Nor will their families allow them to. See, that's what poor folks are for. They take up arms for the rich. Hey, I don't blame Bush for weasling out the vietam war..That was a smart thing to do. But, I'd be damm if I'd send or give my blessing to my sons for this most un-knoble cause.
