to make the studio look more professional. :)

I haven't tried it and can't right now but the answer could change my immediate plans for Paris (not that I'm going anywhere)

DOnHey,

i'm just playing around with the demo of the waves sll4000. It works with Paris 3.0 / Win XP, but as soon I open up the plugin for editing I get streaming errors after ten seconds or so. Doesn't happen with any other plugins. I can put sll plugs in up to 16 channels and got no problem with streaming as long as I don't open the graphical interface. I tried it with FXpansion and FFX4 with no luck.

I have a Athlon XP 3000 with AsRock K7VT6-C and 512Mb RAM.
Does anyone have an idea what to do? Would be sad if they don't work within Paris, or am I just dreaming...

Thanks

SimonI would try with more ram if you can't find another fix. Can you post your paris.cfg file?

fine unless you have a big signal to noise ratio need like a vocal without gating or acoustic guitar. If you can use it for electronic keyboards and such you'll be even better off. They are also great for queue mix outs.
Use your ears and test them. I bet you'll be plenty happy.

Found the Problem: I just had to switch the graphical mode from 16 to 32 bit in my OS. Damn, hours of my lifetime wasted with tweaking and trying once more. But thanks John.
Anyway, i like the Eq-Section of the Plug, sounds very nice even when boosting hard. Anybody else here have experience with the

was about a month later that I was in session there again and the eng privately told me he had discovered that their monitors had been out-of-phase for such a long time that he had become accustomed to mixing with the issue. No yammies in that instance but for some reason, I always begin with answering the phase when image is in question.

You've got a fairly wide open space Deej and it seems phase would be easily detectable. I assume you've totally ruled out wiring/polarity. Never hurts to look.

based on price / sound quality (to my ears) and overall value...

So I started looking on EBay and one evening about midnight I saw an auction for a pair of mint condition RS-1's (starting bid at $400 USD or $460 CDN) and I jokingly put a bid on them knowing full well the bid was too low and as the auction was ending in a half hour a bidding war would soon begin...guess what, the bidding war did not materialise and I won the headphones.

When they arrived I put them on and checked out a few CD's and all I can say is WOW! clarity of mids, sweet highs and a solid low end.

Now as for using them in mixdown...let's just say they clean up the soundscape just enough to really nail L/R placement as well as front to back information that due to limitations in my mixing room are slightly smeared...in other words they are my reference point for 3-D positioning only.

I know that's more than you asked for but what the hell it was fun writing it.

I'll never forget it. I had just logged on to this group and saw a post by Chuck (I think) about a plane hitting the WTC so I turned on the news.Provider was doing some upgrades due to a recent change of ownership that turned out not to be as transparent as they'd hoped.

As Han Solo would say... "It's not my fault!" ;o)

Cheers,
