Don, you have known me for quite a while and I think you could say that though I seem sorta' nuts sometimes, I'm definitely not a leftist. I also believe in the free market. I also own guns (quite a few). I also believe that the reason that the climate is changing is because there are too many of us and we have chosen to use the cheapest fuels we can find to power our industries. It's not the fuels that are evil, per se, it's the amount of them necessary to keep the economic juggernaut in full swing. The economic juggernaut is not just the US. It's global now, like it or not. We could do some things that would be painful in the short run and beneficial in the long run and keep our economy here afloat while we transition ot new energy sources but we are not doing these things. Whether it would make much difference if other parts of the pwrl'd don't do the same is certainly a valid question, but since we are free market kinda' folks, if we did develop new technologies, we could market them.

It's a bauble, an expensive indulgence that serves as a

Hmmmm.....I don't feel guilt ridden at all. I just see things as I think they are. I also don't think humans are inherently evil. Too many horses will overgraze a pasture and turn it into a wasteland. Too many rats in an enclosed space will result in all sorts of aberrant behaviour, finally ending in some major ratricide.
