heh heh Just kidding Martin.

Louis, the answer is that good engineers disagree on this.

Try it yourself, both ways, (say 48x and 2x) have a friend play the CD's without telling you which is which and see if you can spot the hi speed one and the lo-speed one.

We would love to get your opinions after doing this.

I mostly use the soft synths, and there are so many nice free ones that come with it, that I have yet so shell out money for any commercial ones.

It comes with a bunch of nice effects too, and what is really cool is that you can plug in a guitar/bass into a DI port and use the effects directly with the instrument.

If you are a gigging musician who would like to get some VST(i) into your act but have problems lugging a computer around, the Receptor is worth consideration. Big name acts are taking racks of these things on the road now, and it is really catching on.

am, and you?

>>I've bee fine tuning my system. I was still getting some wierdness (crackling and an occasional motorboating sound) out of my Multiface AD/DA's when using them as I/O for external processors in Cubase SX. I had 2 x HDSP 9652's in PCI slots 2 & 3 of my mobo with the Multiface PCI in the Magma along with the 4 x UAD cards. Nothing was sharing an IRQ with my AGP card, but still, I need to use the Multiface AD/DA's when I mix, so I remembered that Chris Ludwig telling me that the P750 would share an IRQ with an HDSP card without any problem. It's not that I didn't believe him exactly, it's just that I never had success with this, no matter what OS I was using, but I needed to do something to solve this problem.....soooo.....I pulled the Multiface PCI out of the Magma, moved the RME cards so that I've got an HDSP 9652 in PCI 1 sharing with the P750, an HDSP 9652 in PCI slot 2 and the Multiface PCI in slot 3.

The system runs better than it did when nothing was sharing with the AGP and the noise issues with the Multiface seem to have been cured.

This si the first time I've ever been successful sharing an IRQ between the AGP and an audio interface.

Go figure.Well, it is faulting.. I established that already. However, regarding that fact, why am I consistently seeing the errors on 'only' the fast burned CDs? The obvious fact is that there are more errors. My burner is at best a year old, and this seems to be consistent across several of my burners, using a multitude of different programs. While not exactly scientific, it's just not worth it when it's proven in my mind that it creates problems. The other factor I'm thinking here is you are likely using good CD players and convertors. Have you tried this test with a cheapo player to see if it's still the same result?
