Are there similar products that are better?

I need total recall and analog sound for an internal Logic mix with UAd-1 best

That's gonna be the fix... I can almost guarantee it 100%.
If it doesn't fix it, then you've got some other kind of issue going on that's not related to the dither noise itself.
Are you inserting the UV22 on every single track in SX? Or across submixes? Just wondering where you're applying it.

You can get a nearly transparent sound out of it or dial in one with some attitude.

Having an output control is really helpful and the 'iron' button is quite useful.

For an overall pre, you can not go wrong with the GR NV

My main preamps are GR and API.

I find for some E. Gits, Kick, Snare, Toms, Bass and about 75% of the vocals

I do (mostly rock, pop) I mostly use the APIs.

And OMG, for Bass, an API into a DBX 160vu is the dream team come true.

C-16's hooked up to the cards and you switch master cards and the volume pot to the new card on submix 1 is lower than the previous one, this will lower the monitor output of your entire project. Asw far as different submixes having different output levels, never had this problem on a 3 or 5 4 card system myself.

>Hi,

I advise if you want forward for the Avalon M5.

This is the most forwarding preamp to my ears, aggressive and in front not brilliant but in your face with great great bottom.
I have Great River (not the NV) with Lundahl transformers.
I only use Great river for electric instruments especially bass and el guitars.
I never use it for vocals, doesn't compliment vocals , thats my oppinion of course.
The best allaround preamp is the Amek 9098 with newer (lower distortion) opa's, really really fanatstic.
But if you are looking for that "special" right in your face sound" with great bottom and not extra harmonics (like 9098) but with great bottom then Avalon is what I would go for.
Anyway , rent one and try before you buy.
Don't buy before trying anything based on what we say.
Regards,
Dimitrios

Brandon,
That happened to me and I was freakin out. =20
Screaming like a banchie then my son asked me that same question. I felt stupid and happy at the same time.

Well, mostly stupid...
