I will send more whenever possible !
I really wanna support you in what you are doing which by other circumstances we would pay a lot more to an author to even try to work on thing like you do !!
So please Paris users even if you will not use much this plugin (I will try it asap)you ought to support this guy and send some money on his way !!
Keep on rocking !

to produce these plugs for us, and we are, basically, his only market. I understand that he has taken a day off work to do this, and I'm sure that he's simply not able to continue this if people don't donate to the cause.

He's doing this on a donation basis but I can't see that he can continue if the donations don't add up. I just wanted to post this so Mike doesn't have to do so himself. ;o)

So I encourage you all to make it worth his while. There's been a lot of talk over the years about ID dropping support. Mike is doing all he can to make up for this and without financial backing it clearly won't continue for as long as it will if we support it.

So if you think you can't afford anything, think about a value that you CAN afford and rethink. If ten people all hold back $5 then we've all lost $50 from the Paris development fund, and let's be honest, Paris development was looking pretty scarce before Mike took it onboard.

Donations and plugs at www.ensoniq.ca

Heads up to you Mike. You're da man. :o)

Hi Dimitrios.

We would need the source code for the algorithm, and then we would need to rewrite in in esp2 assembler. I bought a book on dsp programming that I hope to get to read eventually. That would allow me to write some truly new effects for PARIS.

If we could get the source to an effect, I'd be willing to give it a try.
It would be a hell of a challenge, but I'd take it on if the effect was worth it.

I started on the drpro hall last night. I expect it will blow away the dspfx studioverb. :)

Cheers!

Mike

Thoughts???
<http://vintageking.com/SSL-Matrix-Console>Don't worry guys, there will always be great musicians. There are ten year olds that are great. Thank god, for god given talent.

The whole down slide of musicianship has been going on for about 20 years now, this is nothing new. I'll blame the idiots that got in to the record industry. They blamed big hair rock, and I've got to say bands like Poison did ruin it for rock by going too far over the top, and the industry over played them. I believe a much bigger contributing factor was Yo MTV RAPS! Turning knobs and record scratching may be art and music to some, but it's not true musicianship, and it doesn't appeal to everybody!

Another damaging factor was the other direction the industry went, produced, contrived Bubble Gum like Britney Spears. The record industry made a lot of money for a while on studio produced music, but they kind of turned their backs on musicianship. In the end they poison the well they all drink from. The rebellious angry rock they are trying to push is not going to go anywhere either. They killed the super group, but the funny thing is, that's exactly what they need. The record industry needs great song writers and great musicianship to save it. The industry would like to blame napster or the MP3 for hard times, but the truth is, the industry is mismanaged. The wrong people are running the show. Randy Jackson use to always say to me, A&R guys are sheep with egos. Of course, he was also talking about himself.

Like I was saying, there are still great musicians out there to record. There will always be good musicians. We should encourage good musicianship and try to develop young talent. It will all comeback around.

Here's how it goes down for putting gog in the Paris.

1. Make a folder anywhere on the startup drive that has to be labeled VSTPlugins and it has to be exactly like that and is upper/lower case sensitive.

2. Run the installer and generically choose the startup drive for the install. It only takes a few seconds, but what happens is, the installer is looking for that special VSTPlugins folder and it will create the special plugin and put it in that folder.

3. Then drag that plugin to the VST folder: HD>Library>Adio>Plugins>VST
So I guess there is a little to it....
