

In general the smaller cabs have a harder time with the low end unless they're open back but then it's a little uncontrolled due to rear reflections, wall and stage resonance. If you end up=20 having to over eq to get it, it won't sound natural. I love to see = my=20 pants get wind torn from the low end as long as it's tight.

My buddy used to have that same rig if I'm not mistaken. He used Thiele cabs with it. It sounded really good. I'm=20 not sure it sounded as good as it could with the Thiele=20 cabs though. Nice to spread them out for stereo!

Good luck with your search,

Aaron,

Matching amp/cabs are a no brainer but not always exactly right.

But the right speakers can sound like ass in a bad cab too.

Sorry, couldn't resist.

DC Apparently it's an abomination to Islam to discuss whether or not Mohammed said anything other than what a few chosen mullas decide is OK. I still find it disturbingly amazing that those on the left in this country are so friggin blind that they don't see what is in store for them if they win the ideological struggle that is going on in this country and in doing so, further empower the very antithesis of everything they believe in.

Take a good look at what is happening. It is not Bush's fault. It started long before Bush took office. It is the natural progression of the radical Islamic agenda to use any excuse to jump up and down like a bunch of automations, shoot guns in the air and burn things whilst blithering a bunch of racist, hate driven nonsense.

Coming soon to a Sudetenland near you.

do you really think it fair to discredit both his clearly stated motive and the reasoning behind it in favor of anti-christian paranoia?

Lincoln lived during the 2nd awakening and often used "good vs. evil" as a part of his reasoning as well. Would you be frightened of him as well?

Can only atheists be president?

Where is the specific evidence for the motivations you assign to Bush?

Can you not call the jihadis "evil"?

And all you can do is hate Bush for being Christian...

What is your plan to protect us?

DCWhy was Kissinger successful? He had an agenda.....get us out of VietNam. Everyone agreed on this agenda....even the Russians and therefore they were willing to go the "detente" route. North Vietnam couldn't really pay them for the billions they were expending to prop up that regime. As far as we were concerned, there was never any real desire to stay there once Kissinger took center stage. Cronkite declared victory for the Viet Cong at the end of Tet (December 1968) and everyone went along with this so Kissinger had to

As far as China goes, it was in China's interest to open up relations with the west because their economy was tanking and they were scared as hell of the Soviets.

These were the times we were extremely active in supporting Latin American dictatorships and he was accused of being complicit in war crimes by a few leftist journalists like Christopher Hitchens.

The thing is that international politics isn't pretty. Kissinger may have gotten the Nobel Peace prize, but it was more the time in history than the person, IMO. I mean, Arafat and Annan have gotten the Nobel Peace prize which shows how bogus it really is these days.

Trying to be the passive good guy and pleasing the world gets us the disastrous results of the Carter and Clinton administrations. Just a little correct intelligence at the right time and we'd likely not be in such a mess today. Too bad Clinton screwed the pooch on that one. When Kissinger was Secretary of State, we had an intelligence service that could be depended on. You can't conduct diplomacy without having a few hole cards.

Joel C. Rosenberg, who writes Christian apocalyptic fiction, told me in an interview this week that he was invited to a White House Bible study group last year to talk about current events and biblical prophecy.

Rosenberg said that on February 10, 2005, he came to speak to a "couple dozen" touch with several of them since.

Rosenberg wouldn't say exactly what was discussed. "The meeting itself was off the record, as you could imagine," he said. He declined to name the staffer he said invited him or describe the attendees in any way other than to say that the president was not among them. "I can't imagine they'd want to talk about it," he said.

about the apocalypse. The consistent theme is that certain current events presage the end times, the Rapture, and the return of Jesus Christ. Rosenberg's particular pitch to journalists is that his books come true.

Here he is in a recent interview with Christian talk-show host Pat Robertson , talking about what he thinks is going to happen next: "Now I have to say, says He's going to supernaturally judge Iran, Sudan, Lebanon, Syria, these other countries. We're talking about fire from heaven, a massive earthquake. It's going to be devastating and tragic. But I believe that afterwards there's going to be a great spiritual awakening. We're seeing more Muslims coming to Christ right now than at any other time in history. But I think that's just the beginning. We've got dark days ahead of us. But I believe there's a light at the end of that tunnel."

Rosenberg says he got a call last year from a White House staffer. "He said 'A lot of people over here are reading your novels, and they're intrigued that these things keep on happening Your novels keep foreshadowing actual coming events. ... And so we're curious, how are you doing it? What's the secret? Why don't you come over and walk us through the story behind these novels?' So I did."

Judy Keen first wrote back in October 2002, in USA Today, that "some White House staffers have been meeting weekly at hour-long prayer and Bible study sessions."Gene,

If I actually believed this, I might agree with you. We've certainly disagreed on a number of issues like this but I respect your opinion. I'm sincerely interested to know if this is for real. I've got no problem with people practicing their faith but I do believe that faith in something (like armageddon) can definitely bring it about. I've read a number of articles discussing these things you bring up here, but the sources were easily as fanatical as they purported Bush to be.

I agree that we may be living in the most dangerous time in the history of the human race, but I don't see the same villain that you do.

presidents that were deeply religious, but if he thinks that all the wars and problems we are having in the world are actually a good thing because they have ignited a resurgence in Christian Values, we are in deep shit.
GeneGene -

You probably didn't realize it (so no offense), but your response pretty much confirms my assertion that the tendency of our country and even the world society, is to place blame for religious conflict, violence and religiously motivated terrorism anywhere but with the single largest growing, and currently most violent religion in the world. We ignore car bombings, suicide bombers, torched churches, thousands of tortured and murdered, exiled and ostracized people in favor of blaming the administration for anything and everything, as if Bush made the Pope quote a Byzantine emperor by going to war in Iraq.

Islam isn't the passive, peaceful, non-threatening, all-accepting religion our country seems to blindly want to believe. Some western Muslims might be, but just ask anyone who tried to believe in anything else in many of the conservative Islamic countries of the world. I know, have talked to, and have heard missionaries to these countries speak - it's a different world from the free discussions and widely varying opinions we have here. People die for converting to anything else, or their families do. At best, their families disown them and they sneak out of the country under threat of death. In fact it's the exact opposite of the "freedom" our country continually pushes the limits of. Odd that we would turn on our own country in favor of supporting, or at least turning a blind eye to this kind of ideology, somehow believing that is the more politically correct thing to do.

The problem I see isn't religion, but a lack of faith in God, and hence any sense of direction and moral guidance. God gives us the choice to believe or not. Based on documents of their activities - in the name of Allah the 9/11 terrorists pretty much broke every one of the 10 commandments in 24 hours. That may seem a trivial or even silly fact, but there is a sad, and frightening irony there. Faith in God isn't what one should fear - it's believing in anything that conveniently appeases one's personal whims that is the true danger.... the terrorists proved that in one day. That also includes believing in nothing.

As Blaise Pascal once said (paraphrased): if one believes in God and is wrong, at worst one has lived a good life and had some false hope as a sense of comfort along the way; if one doesn't believe and is wrong, then at best, all is lost for eternity. This is the paradox that we should be considering, and yet the most fear-inducing thought is that the President might believe in something other than nothing. Is no belief really better than belief? What reference point for right and wrong accompanies disbelief in anything higher than one's own decisions? What reference point for respect for other people's beliefs accompanies a lack of belief in any guideline for living life and having respect and compassion for others?

It isn't the administration's fault that the Pope quoted a guy Islam doesn't like just because he called like he saw it - something we do on this forum every single day, ironically. It also isn't Christianity's intent to take over the world, or the government. Far from it. The only goal is to give people a chance to decide. Yet, those that want to decide to not believe would rather take that right away and remove Christianity from public view. The only way to force someone to remove their belief from public in a country that promotes the freedom to believe as one wishes, is to outlaw it. Yet another paradox.

Through our short sighted political glasses we want to see the world as a black and white, free-will, partisan vote where one's party always wins and the decisions are always in our favor, but fail to see any validity in believing a God that gave us the very moral compass to maintain the balance that kind of choice affords us. In essence we put our trust in the very thing we prove day in and day out to be one of the most fallible characteristics of humanity - political and relativistic ideology.

I guess I ignored my own first comment....sorry about that.

I should get back to mourning NI Battery 2's destruction of 10 hours of work :-((....

erize it? Again this just isn't a fair representation.

Never happened. In fact, the eavesdropping of international calls, made by likely terrorists, which was completely legal to do, and provided valuable information, was revealed by the NY Times, in an act of treason (to many of us). No one is opening your mail.

>have trials and find people guilty >and put them to death without ever showing any evidence, why not.

Where did this happen? First, the Geneva Conventions explicitly exclude spies and saboteurs from protection, and governments regularly have executed them without being charged under the GC's, so how do you figure that jihadi are covered?

Do you think you and your loved ones are at risk from these people? If you don't, why not?

>Well I do have a problem. It is NOT OK.
>I want my country back.

Yeah, and I want to go see Bird and Diz on 52nd st. and meet a hot dame there.

Your country is a pre-9/11 one and I do not argue with you because I like arguing, nor do I wish to offend you, since I actually quite like you. But I am convinced that your views would result in my family being put in terrible danger. I cannot remain silent.

We will face jihadis, and we would if Ghandi himself were president. They have revealed themselves to us, for the past 30 years, to be the scum they are. To believe that they can be negotiated with, has to be beyond the pale today.

I wish it were otherwise.

This is an interesting point. They were very wary of "foreign entanglements" but they also went to North Africa and fought the Barbary Pirates so that the seas would be safe, so I am not sure you are right on this.

They would certainly barely recognize our country though. Liberal, big-govt. would have horrified them for certain; surely you realize this?

>presidents that were deeply religious, but if he thinks that all the wars

I agree, but where is the evidence that he makes his decisions based upon those things? He's such a cautious man in so many ways. Don't believe me? Remember the "moral equivulence" argument that idiots like Ward Churchill make? That we are all "little eichmanns" participating in this great evil?

OK, so assume for a moment that we are morally equivalent to Al Queda. Now, what would we have done the morning of 9/12/01?

Think about it! All those subs, all those missiles, all those nukes.

Green glass in Kabul, green glass in Baghdad, same in Tehran, same in Damascus. Then Bush gets on TV and says: "who's next"? That's moral equivalence my friend, and frankly it's what those bastards would do to us if they could.

Instead, Bush tries to foment democracy, and he believes in it so much that he pays to do it the slow and painful way when he could have punched the big red button, and converted the survivors at gunpoint.

As a Christian, I can tell you that the Bible at no point says that we are to start wars and kill people to bring about armageddon. There are idiots who believe such things, but those named in the article you quoted are not among them, and those beliefs are not widely held among us. Believing it to be soon, is very different from trying to make it happen.

James,

statement:

Please help me define what the problem is. Is it Muslims? Just some Muslims?
Which ones?

What about North Korea? They are not Muslims, but they are first (or perhaps things. Pakistan is Muslim and they have several bombs. They have just signed a treaty with the Taliban, and they are hiding the real person that caused 9/11, where is the outrage against Osama bin Laden and the people protecting him?

How about the Non-Aligned Movement. Over 100 countries banding together with Cuba or Venezuela?

Now that we have succeeded in alienating ourselves from the majority of the world, should we see them all as threats? Almost all of our allies are abandoning us, or at the least distancing themselves from us. The only real leader left is on our side

Gene, maybe I am misunderstanding what you are saying, but it sounds like you are saying that Bush is starting and wants a religious war. I think you may be confused. Other people have already started the religious war. Look in to the sixth and seventh pillar of Islam, some where in there it speaks of living by the sword. In other words, if you don't convert, you are to die. I for one do not believe they are civil or peaceful people.

There has not been peace among those people for thousands of years, and now THEY have sucked us in.

They would be nothing in the middle east, but the Communists, Russia and China, supplied all these third world countries with tons of weapons! Now they can make bombs and wage war. Now they know how to make nuclear bombs that can take out US cities. Look at the middle east, south America, North Korea and the mess all across the continent of Africa. Evil people gave more evil people weapons to fight wars with. This has created a world problem, and the Communist want to keep supplying them with weapons and technology.

I know, here comes the liberals with, we gave them weapons too. Think about it, where did this start?

I'm no fan of Bush, but it's just too easy, and unfair to say it's all Bush's fault.

I will say however, the War in Iraq was completely mishandled. Just do the math, one hundred and fifty thousand troops to take care of thirty five million people plus, and thousands of miles of open boarder, in a place the size of California. With five million troops, maybe??? I believe Bush and his friends wanted to be there for years and make all kinds of money on this war. He has created a bigger problem by not taking care of Iraq quickly. There is a lot of blame to go around in our federal government, it's not just one man.

As far as the war on terror, people should be honest with themselves. you can't negotiate a war. there is no diplomatic solution to a war. If you stop to talk, they reinforce, rebuild, and reorganize for more war. Or did we forget the lessons of the past.

In the end, bombs can never stop idealism. The problem is the people that want Jihad will not stop. Peace will never be lasting with these people, it's in their nature to be waring. They think they will be rewarded if they kill and die in the name of Islam. So how do you fix it?

We are more concerned with terrorist rights than doing the job we need to do. When they hit us, we'll have to take them out, make no mistake, it's going to get serious. When they kill millions of americans, blame the spineless politicians that wanted to talk things out and find political solutions instead of facing the hard truth, we are at WAR. We should take care of the problems now, but we are just too weak as a nation. Really think about why we are weak as a nation, and where the blame should go.

JamesGene, I too respect your opinion.

I do ask you to look at another viewpoint.

I do consider yours, despite disagreeing with it often.

is Tony Blair, and he has been summarily dismissed by his own party. With him out and anti-American sentiment running high in Great Britain, who do we have left?

I never said it was all Bushes fault. He just took a relatively unheard of small time international criminal/terrorist (Osama bin Laden) and turned him into an international movement to destroy the US.

At a level of 1.2 billion, Muslims represent about 22% of the world's population. They are the second largest religion in the world. Only Christianity is larger, with 33% of the world's inhabitants.

Islam is growing about 2.9% per year. This is faster than the total world population which increases about 2.3% annually. It is thus attracting a progressively larger percentage of the world's population.

Peace to all

>I don't know if I'm a "leftie" (or a hippie for that matter), but I do know I'm definitely not blind. And here's another thing I'm not -- I'm not an idiot.

Not being an idiot enables me to reason beyond simplistic black-or-white logic. In doing so, what I find "disturbingly amazing" is this oft repeated nonsense that if I don't support Bush's Crusade, I support the terrorists.

NEWS FLASH: Scientists have concluded that there may be MORE than TWO approaches to the problem of terrorism. This should come as a relief to those who have believed that our only options are: 1. wage war on Islamic countries, or 2. do nothing. Yes, folks, there may be other possibilities in between those two extremes, as the recent thwarted terror plot in Britain demonstrates.

"OK, smart-ass, what about Iran?" you may be asking about now. Yes, what about Iran? Shall we leave Iraq in the toilet and try the same thing in Iran and hope for a different result? Isn't that the definition of insanity? OK, you say, what if Iran gets a nuke or two? Yeah, what if? Do you think they're going to guarantee their own obliteration by lobbing nukes into Israel? Or what? Isn't it possible that Iran notices that we haven't even threatened to attack North Korea, the neglected "Axis of Evil" sibling?
Perhaps Iran is thinking, "If we have nukes, the US won't dare invade us."
That would be a logical conclusion on their part, don't you think? If Iran is financing terror, we're going to need the help of our allies, if we have any left, to deal with them. We're also going to need leaders a lot smarter and more honest than the one's we've got.

Here's a thought -- it occurs to me that in fighting the Nazis, Communism, and now Terrorism that our real consistent enemy in all these is brutal authoritarianism, AKA totalitarianism: we don't cotton to anyone trying to violently force their beliefs upon everyone else. Well, wake up and smell the despots, gang, because in our blind terror of Islamic extremists, we're allowing the very thing we fight against to creep into our own government. And this is proven every time someone is accused of "appeasing the terrorists" because they oppose the "war" in Iraq.

Look, once and for all -- NOBODY LIKES TERRORISTS, OK? Except other terrorists. But this doesn't mean we should continue to let insane people lead the charge against them.

Love,

Sarah

There seem to be far too many people that just want to push a button and have the 'problem' go away regardless of collateral damage.

So, WHO today has this kind of diplomatic ability? I don't see anyone who clearly speaks in an effective measured, peace seeking role. I don't know anyone who seems to have the cool head that I percieve Kissinger had. Also, I'm not a history buff so I don't know everything about Kissinger but he always struck me as the ultimate diplomat.

JohnI thought they were on www.parisfaqs.com but I don't see em. I have em on my server if you can't find em, let me know and I'll upload them to yousendit.com

There are three pieces to paris xp. Scherzo driver, Paris app and effects subsystem. You should be able to add remove programs for the subsystem and Paris. Everything only takes 5 mins so I would backup your "default project.ppj", paris.cfg and the "effects.var" (i forget it's real name). Remove all and reinstall in order...scherzo, paris, subsystem.

This started long before 9-11. France, Russia , China and the UN were working against us throughout the 90's. We just didn't have a clue because we didn't have an intelligence service.

.....and where exactly do you get this info? Seems to me that if your assumption was right, North Korea would be a parking lot right about now. We have developed $250,000.00 cannon shells that can be shot out of a howitzer from 25 miles away and hit within 10' of a scumbag so that we only kill his human shields in the immediate vicinity. I'm finding it harder and harder to justify spending this kind of money on people who haven't got the common sense to take these people out themselves (and it's very disturbing to me that I feel this way.....but I'm beginning to).

>One man's obvious truth is another man's propaganda.

Factual truth is not the same as spin. Whatever you believe, (I'm not speaking here of you specifically, Chris, but anyone), if you think people who disagree with you are simply blind, you may be experiencing confirmation bias.

A possible treatment for this is to find a friend who disagrees with you, sit down with them, and really listen to their reasoning. Hold your knee-jerk responses in check. Then find another friend with another point of view and do the same. If you are particularly brave, talk with strangers. You don't have to lose your point of view, but use these conversations as an opportunity to drop any internal defensive system and try, for a moment, to see things from someone else's point of view without promoting your own. It's a healthy brain exercise. We may find it's easier to love others when we operate from inclusively rather than defensive insecurity.

Those of us who live in free countries MUST live with disagreement. Disagreement makes free systems much stronger than systems that rigidly enforce a single point of view, because free systems examine problems from more than one perspective. The best solutions may come from a combination of perspectives. At the very least there will be more solutions from which to choose.

It's therefore healthy that we can have disagreements and enjoy discussions to explore them.

It's just as important that within these discussions at least some listening take place. If it's all mere preaching to respective exclusive choirs then it becomes a sort of babble.

I think most people can agree that fanatical, power hungry ideologues attempting to recruit others to kill for them are a danger to civilized society.

If an authority figure encourages a person to feel cornered and desperate, and then asks for his support in the context of that fear, the person could willingly become a pawn to the authority figure's aims. The person could, through manipulation of his own confirmation bias, feel rewarded by following a movement, even a destructive movement.

Confirmation bias is a reward within the brain when you find information that seems to support your own beliefs while generally ignoring even factual information that contradicts what you believe. From there the human talent of rationalization can kick in with the ability to feel smug and superior over those who "simply cannot see." And thus we don our own ironic blinders.

It can happen to anyone anywhere. It appears to be one of the trailer hitches on the human brain by which you can be towed willingly along while believing you are the driver.

It makes us susceptible, even receptive, to half-truths and even outright lies. We can be misled by scapegoating. Herded by pride. Become parrots of spin and stake our lives on propaganda.

Fanatical nationalism, fanatical religious fervor, these can be harnessed as Machiavellian tools by con artists, wannabe kings, despots, technocrats and theocrats alike. It can happen anywhere.

We are not immune, but we are stronger by having a culture of free thinking, respectful listening and vigorous discussion. Still, we are NOT immune.

The price of freedom is eternal vigilance.

Cheers,

-Jamie

>Hi Sarah,

No one said you had to support Bush to not support terrorists, at least I never did. It really doesn't help your argument to use sarcasm though.

I am referring to the ideology that has been growing in our country for many years - way before Bush 1, or Reagan for that matter. It has nothing to do with Bush 2. I was talking about the world's view of Islam in light of the Pope's comments, so the fact that he keeps coming up as the response, regardless of the original topic, just shows that we would rather blame Bush than address what is happening in the world and in our country's ideology - the people, not the government. The government has nothing to do with the belief systems and relativism that is pervading our culture, media, schools, streets, conversations - it's just a side topic for Monday morning water cooler talk by pale comparison - one that ebbs and flows in the tide of that ideology of the people.

After Bush leaves office I believe we will see the greatest surge of relativistic and chaotic thinking in our history as a reaction of counter-instinct. It isn't about supporting Bush, and I'm not "blaming" the coming reaction on a lack of support for Bush - I couldn't care less if you like him - it's been coming regardless. I don't hate Bush, but I don't like him as a President either. I support our country though and want to see it become a great and revered nation solely for it's commitment to caring about and aiding people that can't help themselves, but that is probably wishful thinking.

I can see past the political fears and ideology to understand that we were also in serious danger during Reagan's years (Russia), Bush 1, and Clinton too as terrorism worked on plans for 9/11 and more that we've since averted, simply because the FBI, CIA and other police are on the vigil more than before. We created the political climate we live with administration after administration - one of deals and compromise to keep the right people happy. It's better than many alternatives, but in way it just propagates a lack of significant positive change in exchange for subtly slow moral decay, since it in and of itself, and our competitive commerce driven society promotes a lack of integrity. Until people (everyone, not just leaders) are willing to risk money, careers, notoriety and stability to stand for something of more substance than sustaining the nice house, car and happy-go-lucky lifestyle we enjoy here, we will continue to cower to the whims of politics and the special interest flavor of the day instead.

I do agree that there is more than one way to fight terrorism - yes, 3, 4 5, maybe 100,000,000. Waging "war" on Islam isn't the answer. But assuming this terror war is simply another political disagreement that can be diplomatically solved with embargos and slaps on the wrist by the UN is also overly optimistic - if only, really I wish it were. I'm not saying you think it is - just making a point.

Truthfully, I don't believe we will ever "win" the war on terror, or rather the ideology that is behind it. We will just delay it for a few years here and there over the next 10, 20, maybe more if we are lucky. But, eventually we will lose, and lose badly, simply because we as a nation don't have an ideology that is stronger, more grounded, and more committed than theirs.

Then again, we really are fighting the wrong war, and I'm not referring to Iraq.

Regards,
Dedric

I think we've got plenty of diplomats in this administration.. They have to have something other than an ideological brick wall or a weasel to negotiate with though. What good did diplomacy with the Koreans or Arafat. To dispatch envoys to discuss international affiars and foriegn policy with terrorists and Nazi maniacs like the Iranian prime minister legitimizes them and their tactics.

<http://www.iranfocus.com/modules/news/article.php?storyid=54> 26

Back around 1970 when I was studing political science, one of the the required courses of study was international government and politics. This book was part of the required curriculum:

http://www.columbia.edu/cu/cup/catalog/data/071030/071030673_3.HTM

It was of particular interest to me because I had a job lined up in the Middle East with a company out of New Orleans named McDermott International to work in Saudi Arabia and the Persian Gulf. It was a great job.....stay 18 months and bring home an incredible amount of money tax free, but it was considered dangerous duty over there, even then. The 1973 arab/israeli war ended up blowing my whole plan out of the water because the company had to reshuffle their experienced employees.....but anyway.....I read the book and quite a few others dealing with the middle east with great interest. Also I had a friend who was an architecture student who was an Iraqi American and we often talked about middle east affairs.....and still do.

Anyway.....this part of the world has interested me for a long time so fast forward to right after 911 but before the invasion of Iraq. I ran across this article which pretty much is spot on IMO about the historical situation as has existed for many years

http://www.fareedzakaria.com/ARTICLES/newsweek/101501_why.html

.....and the most tragic part of it is the last paragraph wherein the author states:

It sounds like a daunting challenge, but there are many good signs. Al Qaeda is not more powerful than the combined force of many determined governments. The world is indeed uniting around American leadership, and perhaps we will see the emergence, for a while, of a new global community and consensus, which could bring progress in many other areas of international life. Perhaps most important, Islamic fundamentalism still does not speak to the majority of the Muslim people. In Pakistan, fundamentalist parties have yet to get more than 10 percent of the vote. In Iran, having experienced the brutal puritanism of the mullahs, people are yearning for normalcy. In Egypt, for all the repression, the fundamentalists are a potent force but so far not dominant. If the West can help Islam enter modernity in dignity and peace, it will have done more than achieved security. It will have changed the world.

I have no reason not to believe (other than the rantings of the autohateBush lunatic fringe community who want to politicize everything) that during this period, had we possessed an intelligence service that could have warned the administration about the duplicity of those in the global community who were rearming Sadaam Hussein at the expense of the Iraqi people using the UN Oil-For-Food program as their cover and the realities of the mountainous stockpiles of munitions that have been converted to IED's and most likely the destinations in Syria and elsewhere where Sadaam was moving his WMD's (I still think we haven't heard the last of this issue), we would have done things differently. Instead we got a "legacy" intelligence service that was horribly flawed. What we have discovered is that we had far more enemies during the Clinton administration than anyone knew. Y

This is the intelligence service that bush inherited. You may or may not think these sources credible, but I think that historical reality has proved them to be correct:

Now what does this have to do with diplomacy? You have to have good information in order to conduct diplomatic negotiations. Yeah, Rice could go out there and negotiate with terrorists and the Korean lunatic. Clinton tried it for 8 years. At some point you have to learn from mistakes of the past.

There are so many issues involved, but one of the main topics as it applies to the current situation is has Bush's policies and actions increased or decreased that islamic fundamentalist support? It seems to be growing like wildfire whereas it used to be embers.

I think this has less to do with Bush and Iraq and more to do with finding a time/place/excuse to wage this jihad. Iraq has provided all three, but I think it would be happening elsewhere and if not now.....soon.

>Hi Dedic,

No, you didn't say I had to support Bush to not support terrorists . . .
but that attitude is still out there, unfortunately, and some of the responses to your original post reminded me of that. My initial response to you was in complete agreement.

And I don't really disagree with anything you've said here except that I don't think relativism is quite the threat you seem to see it as. Most people don't take relativism to the extreme of justifying suicide bombers.
Also, rejecting ethnocentrism doesn't make one a cultural relativist, speaking for myself. There is a middle ground there.

As for the sarcasm, sorry about that, but it helps me to diffuse my anger about these issues.

Near the end of this post, you said, "But, eventually we will lose, and lose badly, simply because we as a nation don't have an ideology that is stronger, more grounded, and more committed than theirs." I think we do have a stronger, more grounded, more committed ideology than theirs. It involves concepts like unity, integrity, honesty, democracy, and, as we all recited with hands on hearts in grade school, with liberty and justice for all. These are sky high ideals that our country is found upon, and the reason I get so angry and sarcastic is because it upsets me to see us drift steadily away from those ideals.

And if this newsgroup were put in charge of the country:

1. We would disagree on whether the White House comps would be PCs or Macs.
2. Cabinet meetings would refer to Marshall, Ampeg, etc.
3. Lobbying would refer to the noon jam session in the lobby
4. Bipartisan would mean we decided on both PC and Mac.

5. ProTools would mysteriously fall out of favor

(what? no, we would never do that...)

Leap Symphonic Choirs going on this month that is very tempting.

It looks like there is a good chance it will reach its potential low price of 398 (995 list) so this is a good opportunity to get it at discount, if you need it.

The on-line videos are cool to check out even if you are not interested, just to see the state of the technology.

It seems to want, ideally, two other local drives apart from your main system drive...

I'm trying to get it running on a machine with only one drive, but it won't play ball...

Cheers,

Kim. So I played a multi-band club gig this afternoon with the GNX4 going direct, balanced, to the PA and the tiny powered Galaxy monitor on a mic stand pointed at my guitar and ears. I asked the sound guy if he liked my "stack." (grin)

Turned out he's also a guitar player. He plays through an tube stack of his own and he was obviously underwhelmed by my stage gear. Being diplomatic, he said, "whatever works for you." But he didn't quite disguise a bit of stack snobbery. He obviously had low expectations for the rig.

Then we played our show. He had complete control, the guitar sounded huge through the PA (and the violin, which I also route through the GNX4, also sounded great). There were no stage volume issues. The band was tight, and we had a fun show. Afterwards I asked again if he liked my "stack."

He loved it. Said it sounded GREAT. Mind changed.

The next band had the requisite Marshall guitar amp, 4/12 cab and a similarly sized bass rig. Aimed strategically at the back of each player's knees and CRANKED. The sound guy had no chance to control anything in the moderate-sized club, Their set was mush from the getgo.

Cheers,

-Jamie

>>Hey Jimmy,

No doubt one can be a good person without believing in God - there are tons of great people with no faith, or very little. That in and of itself tells me there must be a God so even non-believers would have a strong sense of right and wrong on a societal and even global level.

To walk through some thoughts: with no God, or higher reference point, what would be considered moral, or at least good? What would one use to decide what is right and wrong?

Laws? Most would agree that we can't legislate morality now, so with no basis for what morality is, why would we even bother with laws since everyone would make their own choices anyway?

Intellect? That would simply depend on what one chose to accept as "intelligent" thought, based completely on opinion.

Reasoning and Logic? Logic is determined by a hypothesis that has a proven outcome in a given situation. Change the situation, and the reasoning or logic behind the "right" or "wrong" could easily change.

Experience? What if one's experience is filled with hatred, abuse, anger and violence, or worse? Then someone would have to decide whose experience we would use as a reference point. There would be no guarantee that person or persons had experiences that would be best for the good of the whole.

Survival instinct? If it were a reference point, then stealing, lying, cheating and even killing would be perfectly justified as those can be means of survival.

Why would right and wrong even exist? I would think that the differences between societies' definitions of right and w rong, assuming societies even existed, would be so drastic we would never have ventured into any form of inter-cultural/inter-geographic interaction, much less relationships, diplomacy, collaboration, trade, and open travel.

As long as "morals" are only relative to each individual, they aren't absolute morals that would last longer than the time it takes to make the choice. We would just have 6.5 billion opinions. There would only be an ever changing perspective on what seems to "make sense" at the time, and based on this premise, even "making sense" would vary from person to person, day to day, minute to minute. In that case, our prisons would either be filled with innocent people simply judged "wrong" at the time because their choices didn't match the preferences of the majority; or we wouldn't have prisons, or likely even organized societies.

But is the majority always right? How would we know if there were no absolutes that supercede the majority in some form?

If there were no right and wrong, there would be no consequences of either, or at least we wouldn't view the outcome as a good or bad consequence - it would just be another event in time.

But by grace and as a gift of freedom, God gave us a choice, both in whether to believe in Him and whether to make right or wrong decisions. With moral absolutes (God's word) as a reference we have a way to evaluate drastically differing situations on an equivalent basis; with consistency in reasoning and compassion; by choice and instinct rather than puppetry. Even when we choose to do wrong, He is willing to forgive us. Without that option to choose, balanced by God's grace and forgiveness, there would be no power in choosing to believe in Him. That's what makes God a personal and loving God rather than a dictator or puppet master.

Odd as it may seem to anyone who doesn't believe, I can see God in the way that 1) we as a group of intelligent people on this forum can discuss completely opposing opinions and still care enough to consider insulting, belittling, slandering and hating one another an intolerable concept; and 2) in all likelihood agree that peace and compassion completely trump greed and power in importance to life and survival together

> Faith is complete trust or confidence in something or someone. Religious faith is one form of faith but not the only definition of "faith."

For example I have faith that if I drop a guitar pick it will find its way to the floor based on the gravitational attraction it has to the planet. I have faith that I'll breathe my next breath, that I'll see tomorrow morning. I have faith that other people are put together much like I am and that I can therefore relate to other folks.

Without faith, people would not invest money. Without faith people would not vote. Without faith people would not start businesses, hire other people, raise children. Without faith people would not ride trains, fly in planes or drive cars. Without faith no one would investigate scientific questions about reality.

While you can clearly have faith without religion, you cannot have religion without faith. Religion depends on faith that one or more deities (good and sometimes bad) exist, that their associated stories actually occurred, and often, that there is some sort of afterlife.

However, religious people believe in a variety of different deities. Even those who believe in the same deity disagree, sometimes violently, about the nature of their deity. Religions sometimes even disagree about the nature of reality. If you want to base morality strictly on religion, and you look around, you'll notice that religion can be a somewhat chaotic basis unless...

There are other issues surrounding religions, such as the many examples of selfless dedication to helping others on the one hand, and hijacked religions used to legitimize earthly power structures in other cases. Dedic, I look forward to talking with you about the positives and negatives of various religions, and where a moral culture ought to go from here, whenever we next get together.

<http://us.video.aol.com/video.index.adp?pmmsid=1704499>Hi Jamie,

While those are certainly good examples of the common definition of faith,, we shouldn't confuse faith in God with trust that event B will follow event
A. The latter can also easily be attributed to learned behavior. But not all aspects of faith in God can be seen or experienced.

Hebrews 11:1

What is faith? It is the confident assurance that what we hope for is going to happen. It is the evidence of things we cannot yet see.

And no doubt that can apply to a falling guitar pick, though I doubt you hope that will happen during a gig. ;-)

How does one believe that there is life after death though, or that God is sovereign even over devastating situations? That is where the faith I refer to comes into play. And I would also propose that the same sense of faith we use to start a business, or enter into marriage, or believe that we'll see the next day, is part of the desire and drive that God has designed in us to propel us forward, and draw us to Him as well. It is a part of being human - a feeling, thinking, growing, individual.

The point was that moral absolutes aren't based on religion, and wouldn't be moral absolutes if they were. The idea of God-defined absolutes excludes the possibility that man could create or change that absolute.

By saying that man creates absolutes based on his religions says that his religion is false (created by that man), and therefore, no belief has any absolutes, and all beliefs are relative only to a single individual at a single point in time. We could extrapolate that to whether murder, rape and other acts we consider "hideous", but would have to conclude that all are right and none are wrong. The reason being that we would only be viewing them through our own created "right and wrong" and not anyone else's. That would also extrapolate to terrorists that kill people believing that it is Allah's will to destroy those that oppose them. But obviously we don't believe that is "right" any more than we believe Charles Manson was "right" to do what he did.

So where do we get the foundation for a "fair justice system" and "common sense"? If we have no reference point, then we must have just made it up. In that case, it's only relative to our perspective, and is neither right or wrong to anyone else, and maybe not all of the time for us either. If we created right and wrong, and we aren't perfect, then there is nothing stopping us from changing the rules when it suits us individually, regardless of the impact on others. Without that sense of governing authority that outlasts our governments, what holds us to be by very nature mostly "good", by most any definition?

What makes all of our choices seem to follow a similar core value system? If we have no common thread of belief in what is right and wrong, then why do most people (and likely all, even extremist terrorists) prefer peace to war; love instead of hate; fairness instead of injustice; truth instead of deceit? If there is nothing connecting us and superceding our own locally relative decision process, then how could we have any sense of "common sense", much less right and wrong?

We see the evidence of these everyday. We easily agree as a world culture for the most part (excepting obvious deviations), that murder is wrong; stealing is wrong; laws should be obeyed, not abolished; etc. That is the evidence of unseen, never globally written in stone, but always pervasive moral absolutes. So in reality we all have faith that moral absolutes do exist, and if no individual created them (by the hypothesis that relativism would make them irrelevant), and all mankind just happen to adopt and hear about them without actual communication to propagate those beliefs, where did they come from if not from God?

Regards,
Dedric

;o)My point is that faith is necessary for life, with or without religion. Faith in a deity, faith in an afterlife, these are certainly examples of faith. My point is that faith is not exclusive to religion.

Nor is a moral basis, a system of justice - these are necessary for civilization, again with or without religion. Religion is fairly useful in construction such a system, to the point that religions have been invented to help cement power and define social organization. But that doesn't mean a religion, or a universally acknowledged deity, is required for that role.

It may be that you are having trouble groking the idea of morality without a deity because you have so tightly associated the two in your life, which is totally understandable. But what you propose is begging the question. Others can make the distinction, and maybe it's worth the effort to understand why.

There are many perspectives. For example a social libertarian perspective. You own yourself. What you do with yourself is your choice until and unless it interferes with someone else's ownership of their own person. You can derive the rest from there. This is a pretty strong start which certainly can allow for a law-based free society, including religious freedom.

We are into a deep subject which is better discussed in person when people are willing to both talk and listen, as I have faith we are. :^)

I may be missing some of your intended points and I suspect we may be talking past each other somewhat in email. So since we don't live all that far apart, let's get together soon, explore the topic over a beer, and see what we come up with.

Cheers,

-Jamie

our "God-given" intelligence which allowed that moral evolution.

The only problem I have with using the word "God" in any discussion of morals, reality, etc., is that there are too many different ideas of who, what, or if God is. Thus "God" becomes kind of a short cut, a metaphor for pretty much anything that transcends human understanding.

Perhaps as a courtesy to others involved in a discussion, if one is going to use the word "God," one should include a definition of the term. For example, if by "God" you mean the innate awareness of good that connects all of us spiritually, I'm down wit dat. If by "God" you mean a Big Guy in the Sky who fries his own "children" in a lake of fire, I'm probably going to ask questions, like, "Well, um . . . does he have a penis?"

"The stars up above are runnin' on love." - Captain Beefheart

The key word is group.

A group of neo-Nazis won seats in this weeks elections in Germany.

http://www.nytimes.com/2006/09/17/world/europe/17cnd-germany.html?_r=1&hp&ex=1158552000&en=ae34ff540e2ea150&ei=5094&partner=homepage&oref=slogin

This group does not speak for all Germans.

A recent NYT article talks about the infiltration of the US Army with skinheads.

of your skin.

<http://select.nytimes.com/gst/abstract.html?res=F50713FE3B540C748CDDAE0894DE404482&showabstract=1>

This group does not speak for all members of the Armed Services or all Americans.

The world is filled with small groups of extremists, even here in the USA. The trick when dealing with them is to stop them without turning them into figureheads or martyrs. Our blundering has had the opposite effect.

On 9/11 a small group of extremists who were basically seen as outcasts by the majority of the Muslim world attacked our country. Our actions since have doubled and doubled again the scope and severity of this problem.

I am afraid you are right, if we continue on our current course we will turn this into a world war.

Just to be clear, my definition of victory was "not fighting", rather than my having won the argument.

Someone is right here, and someone is wrong. If I am right, you and some others will have some serious crow to eat. If you are right, likewise for me and some others.

There is a point at which it is clear that no minds will change. We have reached that point.

In the future, I would like us to commiserate together, rather than say "I told you so" because the possible result of either position could just SUCK huh?

Hence the "declaration".

ps

Good friend of mine, (not a bushie by any means) dared to ask some of his friends what their plan was, should the jihadis, not the president, show themselves to be the real issue here. these antiwar folks (long time friends of his BTW)literally started yelling, spluttering and chanting slogans in his face! We have avoided that. That is a victory.

So have a beer, and consider if the other guy has a point.

A purely pragmatic question.

If the worst happens and a WMD goes off in a major US city, what would the appropriate response be?

answer.

ourselves, but if the responsible people are a small percentage of the population of a country or region, what should we do? Nuke the Middle East?

This is the time we should be talking about it. If we wait till it happens we will be caught up in the moment and we could make decisions that literally end civilization.

I lost friends on 9/11. I have not forgotten. However, I do not blame innocent people for the actions of others.

Our government!

GeneWe can disagree about that but the first line is the dictionary definition.

>"Without God, all is permitted."

A few questions about that assertion:

1) Which God? Your God or anyone's God? If your God, are you then asking for everyone to convert? If everyone doesn't convert will there be a head tax on those who don't?

2) When considering the non-deity case, why should we assume a sociopath as the arbiter of morality?

3) Pretty much all HAS been permitted in the name of a deity at one time or another. Sociopaths are not limited to the non-religious. How would you deal with religious sociopaths acting in the name of declared morality?

When I was recording Beyond 2000, in the 80's, (87 I think), we went to Bell Labs in New Jersey and they were just starting to work on a laser chip for computing...it was big...about the size of a dining room table, but they had it switching on and off....embryonic then. Those guys there had dream jobs...PhD's, and all they had to do was dream, and think of "what is / what if...."

I think you did pretty well, actually.

"Which God to follow" can be a sincere question, as in:
"it makes sense to me that God would have a plan for our lives and wants the best for us, and I need to know who God really is"

or it can be rhetoric, from a clear atheist position, as in:
"well, there's a god over here and there's a god over there, and another one in Boston, and how are we to know which god is the right one?"

and the person really believes in no God whatsoever.

The difference is important because if one believes in a creator, it is reasonable to assume that the creator is interested in him as well. This, at least is the Christian position, and the Bible and certainly the life of Christ centers on the issue of "who cares about humans anyway?"

Well, John 3:16 answers that doesn't it, and while secularist reasoning can be shown to be utterly self-referential and even irrational, in the end spiritual things are spiritually discerned and if someone simply wishes to dispute, they may do so, forever.

So, as a Christian, believing that Jesus came to save me, and that the Bible narrative, while not perfect in the details, nonetheless contains His story. I would say on that basis, that the God of the Bible is the right one, and I would say that the muslims are mistaken and do not serve God at all. "By their fruits you will know them"

However there is the obvious case of the righteous Muslim, Buddhist, Hindu etc. I do believe that the imprint of our creation exists in all of us, granting even the atheist a conscience, despite their basic antipathy to absolutes. Beyond that, I also believe that God turns no one away, so there is the mystery of those who seek God in their own culture and their own religion, clearly finding Him!

We are responsible for what we know, not what the other guy knows.

That doesn't make faiths all equal or the same.

BTW, the case can be made that ANY theistic belief is superior to atheism and neo-darwinism, simply because it gives at least some basis for universal morality.

What about the righteous atheist? Well, there are a few of these, and I think some of them have been called by God to do good despite their ideology and that thing they follow that they call "conscience" is in reality the Holy Spirit and they may be saved on the basis of their reaction to that voice of God. I also think that denominations generally thoroughly suck (good theological term eh?) and have driven away many righteous people who live without religion in a righteous manner. I do believe they are all called to join the rest of us at some point, but I will not pretend to judge them, nor Hindus, Muslims etc on when that is.

Brain Welch (Head) from Korn became a Christian a while back, and evidently has a new tune called "Religion Must Die" and I think he has a point. Take a look at his new site. I like the music.

<http://www.headtochrist.com/>

Of course, whatever emerges from the death of religion, even if it is the most dynamic Christian community since the 1st century, will be called 'religion' by the secularists who so dominate our culture, so it's semantics to some extent.

How many countries shall we bomb back to the stone age in an attempt to rid the world of potential threats? How many civil wars shall we create and get bogged down in to appease our more war-like citizens? Cuz last time I checked, there were easily half 3 or 4 dangerous states posing a much greater economic and/or military threat to us and our allies than Iraq recently did.

And speaking of Iraq, how the hell are we ever gonna spare the man-power to fight other countries while we are so severely over-taxed in Iraq? Is it any accident that Iran has been so loud and obnoxious recently? They know we are compromised tactically. They laugh loud and long every day at our current difficulties.

Any of you guys ever bone up on the last 60 years or so of Arabic/Persian history? We've been playing with fire for a long time now, as far as I can tell. Seems to me that part of the current problem is that a lot of skeletons in our national closet are coming to light. I certainly don't condone the radical Islamic fringe that seems to have it in for us, but folks in the Mideast in general have a few good reasons to profoundly resent our beloved U.S.A. Would I like to erase the earth of all religious and political fundamentalism? Hell yes. I'd also like us to get really, really, serious about not meddling in the affairs of other people in a decades-long effort to influence the price of oil.

No Universal Binary yet for Cubase not till 4.0 comes out so I don't think it will work if it is a Intel based one.

'pute and wants a bigger faster, but portable, machine.

Yep....there are whack jobs everywhere out there. I wonder how much of this stuff is backlash from the broadcasts we've been seeing for years of the automations produced by the madrasas

Or perhaps another former Colorado Senator, former president of the University of Northern Colorado, now president of the University of Colorado, Hank Brown. He has done some local diplomacy in this state and seems to know how to calm people down.

I think I answered your question as much as I can by stating that a diplomat cannot do anything unless there is willingness to participate in a meaningful and sincere dialog.....so keeping in mind that a negotiator must have credibility and those for whom he is negotiating must have some sort of track record of credibility, I ask you.....who do you think would be a credible negotiator for Iran, North Korea, Syria?

We might want to start with recommendations published in 1999, well before the 9/11 attack.

We can disagree about whether our current policy is one of overreacting or not. We can probably really disagree about the newly minted preemptive attack policy. :^)

As to risk, many people have faith that their risks will pan out. Some people do things because they have such faith. I know people like that. I am people like that. That doesn't preclude anyone from doing something for some other reason, of course.

If you want to say you don't have faith in anything, using any of the definitions below, then that's your prerogative and I don't have a problem with that.

I would go with a MacBook Pro and run Cubase under XP/ Bootcamp for the next few months. The UB version should be out soon. For just a few tracks the

This is an extremely fast box, and with an external drive you can do serious recording, editing and mixing on it.

For simple needs, I would suggest an M-Audio Firewire interface. Low cost, good drivers, works Mac and PC fine and she can even go to Pro Tools M-Powered later if she likes. (Did I say that?)

GeneWhat do buffer and latency matter for anymore, what with ADC on native systems?

I seriously have no idea, being a Paris junkie since the beginning.

Not DJ but...

I had it for a few hours before my temp license timed out prematurely. Sounds nice and fairly close to the real thing. I did a short comparison to my Portico5043. The UAD has a similar flavor and controls the dynamics in a very similar way, but it is missing the creamy sound of the hardware - And I hate people

I will get it. I might as well render the real thing.

Nearly every time you read 'without faith there would be no XXXXXXXX' it's just not true and XXXXXXXX can get along just fine without faith. Probably the best popular book about risk is called 'Against the Gods' and it's sort of about this very topic.

Were these tested for noise and microphonic distortion prior to you purchasing them?

Do you offer any guarantee?
If so...please reserve them for me until next week.

Without risk management there would be no insurance.

Seems like we have some major risk management headaches ahead in the foreign relations area. I don't have much faith that our current government understands the situation or is capable of brokering a lasting and beneficial peace.

I don't think there is any newly minted attack policy. There has always been the clear and present danger prerogative but it needs to be based on accurate intelligence. Had this been available, then I doubt that Bush, Kerry, Kennedy Pelosi and the rest would have authorized the invasion of Iraq, or perhaps they would have been able to find the WMD's before they were shipped out of the country or hidden. I just find it hard to stomach the hypocrisy of the democrats whose policies neutered our intelligence services in the '90's when they trun around and blame Bush for the decisions made based on the intellegence blunders they created in the first place.

It's a twisting of the truth! The children are not being taut to kill people, they are being taught to be an army for Christ, to spread the word of god.
The terms they are using like soldiers, are a figure of speech. It should be soul-diers

Of corse they would inter view an anti Christian to get their twisted take on it. I know your on the left coast, but come on Gene!"James McCloskey"

Gene and all others with comments,

Is the Neve 33609 even worth the bother?

I want to use the $50 coupon on a plug. I'm strongly considering the = Precision Multiband.

If it sounds as good as it looks and functions as simply as it appears I = think it could make a difference in my lower end mastering projects (the only ones I do). =

Now I'm using Paris EQ,=20

NoLimit, Paris Comp, but no real pristine compression. The Waves = multiband is average at best=20 to my ear. That's all I've got around here in higher end software. = I've delved into the Waves Ren Comp=20 a few times too. It's okay. The Sakis method is too involved for my = limited mastering hours. I typically have to get a CD done in less than four hours to make it worth the = client's/my while.

For $200 or less is there a better choice for an easy to use multiband = comp? Otherwise I might spring for the=20 1073 but I have two Neve pres here in hardware form that I track with = alot.

Is the UAD 140 way better than the SIR plates? If not I'll pass on that = too.

I'm thinking the Cambridge EQ (just got that and like it) with the = Precision Multiband Comp would be a=20 fine addition to a sweeter sounding master and even individual tracks = here and there. =20

All opinions welcome!

I was present at a few recording sessions with Willie & friends back in the early/mid 80's. I thought we smoked up all of the pot on earth then and there wasn't any left. I've still got a hangover from one of those sessions.....

As stupid as this was, the stupidity is likely a result of having smoked so much pot so maybe he can plead insanity. I hope he doesn't do time.....and he very possibly could. There is plenty of finger pointing to go around. No doubt specific things could have been handled better under the previous government.

The transition of power between the previous and current governments was pretty rocky, and a "not invented here" syndrome may have doomed the hand-off of some al-Qaida related work that was in progress.

In any case, no government gets a pass by blaming the previous government. The current government, for example, failed to follow through and prioritize the al-Qaida threat ahead of 9/11 and failed to prevent 9/11; failed to find and capture Bin Laden in Afghanistan; failed to overcome Taliban control of large areas of Afghanistan; allowed record drug production to reestablish itself there; failed to plan for post Iraq invasion problems predicted by their own state department; and they have continually exploited the "war on terrorism" for domestic political ends.

You assert the WMDs were there. However Bush's chief inspector, and Bush himself, say they weren't there after all. It was a bluff. One of the Iraqi expatriate promoters of the bluff got the ear of our government, was believed, and, last I heard, had parlayed it into a position of power in Iraq after the invasion.

The Dems you mentioned authorized the military attack on Iraq as a last resort and I don't believe they were satisfied it was done as such.

Preemptive invasion is new as part of the "Bush (Jr.) Doctrine."

Cheers,

e film is

unbiased. Remember when Willie pulled off to the side of the road a couple of years back 'cause he had a bit too much to smoke and decided to sleep it off? The state trooper that busted him confiscated a half a joint from his ashtray, and asked "do you have any more of this Mr. Nelson?". Willie's reply was "Officer, that's all you'll need...". :)

Willie said in an interview that he had smoked pot every day if his life since 1956, with the exception of three months when he was preparing to test for his black belt. DJ--I was at his house a couple of times back in that ere also, and he always had a salad bowl full of buds on the table...

I did live sound for a group once that had a bunch of little kids so worked up with a witches brew of extreme patriotism and emotional faith that several kids fainted. The bigshot who ran the event actually yelled at me "LOUDER LOUDER". Today, I would power down and walk away from such an event and tell them to keep their damn money. These people are essentially atheists in that they nearly zero faith in God to convict people and win them over, so they must do it themselves with blubbering and manipulation.

But why do you guys need to lie about it? They weren't worshipping to Bush, they were praying for him! Don't you think he NEEDS it??

I abhor the connecting of faith to ultra-patriotism, because the govt. is so fallible and may betray us at any time. God is not fallible, and faith and country should never be conflated.

So, yeah, Gene, there are extremists, but what I want to know is why you lie about them and accept lies about Christians so easily? You apparently hate Christians much more than Muslims, since your criticisms are only pointed at Christians.

C'mon, let's hear you have a go at the Muslims for a bit!

Need some websites? movies? comedy? Think there is a lack of evidence of the evil they have planned for you and yours, and have been acting on for 30 years now?

Are you unable to criticize Muslims? Have you drunken the liberal kool-aid?

expiring minds want to know!

Just a little hint. I love talking politics as much as the next man of course... but I refrain these days due to my role as head newsgroup dude...

Mind you we seem to be staying fairly civil about things generally which is great to see. No intolerable meaningless abuse that I've noticed. Perhaps we could move some of the politics on to the General group though if we want to keep it going. I know some on the group aren't fans of politics in the main group, which I understand and appreciate.

Finish your discussions if you feel the need, but any new threads might be better placed in General if that's cool... I don't want to dampen the discussion. Just don't want the audio discussion on the main group getting lost in the politics...

Thought I'd better say something as it's showing no signs of easing off...

Couple be bothered? Try couldn't be bothered...

....is it dislexia if you just type the complete wrong word? What's with that?!?

Cheers,

Kim.HI,

It only matters under 2 scenarios.

1. Playing VST INstruments in real time.
2. Processing native effects on a live input.

Otherwise you can set the buffer high to free up resources.

When using Direct monitoring the software monitor inputs at the hardware level so no latency.

ADC becomes more useful in the mixing stage Cubase will keep all the plug ins including external plug ins sample accurate. Paris will do this only with its EDS effects not with native. Actually most programs didn't only had this type of compensation on inserts only forever. Steinberg were the first to figure out how to do it across the whole path. I wish Steinberg would stop with all the innovation stuff so I wouldn't have to keep track of all the new features the competitors have in their programs. :0

Extending the Vietnam war into Cambodia and Laos, running operation Condor to destabilize a moderately leftist regime in Chile, blanket support for Suharto in Indonesia in the 70's. These just come off the top of my head as places that destroyed US credibility in places where it was unnecessary to be involved at all.

I posted the link about Becky Fischer for a specific reason. It was not to embarrass or criticize any true believers, but to point out that some extremists exist on the Christian side. My Point?

It is unfair to paint the modern Christian movement with the brush of Becky Fischer, or Fred Phelps. The Christian movement may have a few extremists, but they do not represent the majority of good people following the Christian cause. Funny, because that is the exact point I am also trying to make about the modern Moslem movement, which is not just a bunch of knife wielding maniacs. It is largely a mixture of fundamentalists combined with many who want to see more progressive reform in the Moslem church.

Of the over one billion Moslems in the world today perhaps 1% are extremist takes one with a WMD to cause great harm. But what about the 99%?

I am still waiting for someone to answer my question about what we should do if we suffer a major attack and a Moslem extremist group takes credit.

Should we kill 1,000,000 people? How about 1,000,000,000?

I do condemn Moslem radical violence . Killing a Nun because of what the Pope said is unconscionable but it is not all Moslems.

P.S. Please point out my lies. I may be delusional, but I think I am trying to bring some balance to a very one-sided and highly charged issue.

GeneOk, so who do you consider to be a great diplomats period?Marketing for a new album or tour!

It depends on the definition of diplomacy, of course, so I'd say probably the best diplomat we've had as a president in a while was Bush Sr. When you compare the quality, quantity, and staying power of his coalition in Gulf I to the phony coalition of the bullied and bought for Gulf II it says a lot. I'm no Bush Sr. fan at all, he was a warmongering bastard like every president since at least McKinley, but he was shrewd and rational. I think Colin Powell had a real chance until he got neo-conned. I think he had the temperment and the fact he was non-white gave him a different sort of credibility than, say, James Baker when he would talk to non-European countries. I think Saudi ambassador prince Bandar was given enviable cards to play (best oil fields in the world) but has managed them impressively considering his country leads the world in beheadings and funding Islamists.

Historically, in the west, I'd say Metternich has to take the cake even though he believed everything I despise. Austria by rights was a bit player on the European stage but their chief diplomat remade most of Europe.

For the US, I'd say nobody has come close to Benjamin Franklin, with John Adams as a second. Adams was able to convince both finance and political bigshots to believe in a country that didn't exist, and to lend us lots of money and a Navy. Franklin did much the same with the French, exquisitely managing a relationship with Talleyrand, another stunningly nimblefooted (or treacherous depending on your opinion) diplomat. And Franklin managed this while being adored by the French and banging lots of hot French aristobabes on the side. So that goes along ways with me.

Just my ideas off the top of my head. The US has been starved for true diplomats and strategic thinkers for some time. That's part of the reason we're in the mess we're in now.

Gene,

I have a stereo pair of Distressors and a Demeter VTCL-2 tube comp. I don't think either of these comps are right for stereo bus work at the mastering level. Is your experience with the UAD Mastering series plugs less=20 fruitful than my hardware options? I really don't want to buy a hardware mastering comp.

been using 1x12's exclusively for 21 years. Moreover, loaded with EV 12-L Series II spkrs. Rated @ 300w, most players would run, not walk, from these for distortion of any kind. And while I can't really tell you how or why I decided that these were my best option, they remain just that. Next to a good FOH eng, these are the most significant components in my signal path. I've never looked back. Maybe because my 1x12's were custom built and based on an old Pacific (Michael Forest) design and employ high grade, slow growth, light-but-dense Norwegian fir. I use just one primarily but when the stage is big enough and the players be fine, I switch the old 50/50 to stereo and run the twin cabs about 20' apart, 10' away, pointing back, up and and slightly in and jump feet first into what one of my gig compadres calls "one big luxurious stereo sonic bathtub."

There are moslem countries that harbor moslem terrorist. Some of the moslem governments support these terrorist financially. Some of the same people that are in the moslem government are also members of the terrorist organizations.

There is no separation of religion and government. Their religious leaders control their government. These religious leaders call for the destruction of the United States.

Who do we bomb? We bomb the moslem countries that are behind the terrorist attacks! Although conventional bombing will not stop the problems.

They try to build nukes, we take them out before they take us out. They have made their intentions clear! We need to take out the nuclear facilities in Iran. If we have to go to war, will innocent people be killed? YES! That's war. We didn't start it they did!

The first thing I would do in the name of peace, would be to stop supporting Israel. But I don't think you would like that, would you? Last year we caught Israeli spies in Washington spying on our government. Why should we keep supporting them??? How does Israel help the US? Allies, did they help us fight the Korean war, Vietnam war, gulf war, any war??? We hand them money hand over fist, billions a year, why? You all know why!

You want to fix it? We need to stop supporting Oh Israel. They got the nukes already, god will protect Israel, they don't need us. We need to butt out!

Although, I'm not sure that it would stop the moslem terrorist from their mission of destroying the US. They are hell bent on this. How many times have they had peace agreements only to turnaround and break cease fires? There will never be peace with moslems. They are not peaceful people, just look at what they are doing, they kill their own. It is going to take something vary serious to stop all of this and it's not going to be talk.Ted Kennedy

Gene, there are many that use the name of Christ for their own evil purposes.

There are many radical people that call themselves Christians. I don't know who these people are, that you point out. In Christianity, it is a figure of speech to say lay down your life for Christ. It means to devote your life to christ and to teach the gospel to everybody, not to go out and kill people in Christ's name. This is a misinterpretation.

In the ten commandments it says, "Thou shalt not do murder", so I don't know what you are talking about when you say a second commandment. The second commandment is to not build false idols and worship them. More misinterpretation.i nominate you for john's diplomat search..props to you...damn, i wasn't going to enter this fray...

>For most of the Clinton years the balance of power was divided between both parties. Again, there is plenty of finger pointing to go around.
It's easy enough in hindsight to criticize the previous administration on a number of counts.

And in retrospect, those dems made a mistake trusting Bush with that vote. OTOH, it was a moment of unity.

Flash forward. Today all branches of national government are controlled by one party. It doesn't bother me if you want to point blame at some of the policies under Clinton. But again, merely pointing fingers backwards in no way excuses the mistakes and failures of the current government.

They walked in stating in clear terms that they felt the previous government was wrong about almost everything, and then fell flat overall, domestically and internationally.

Looking at both governments, we can do better. We must do better.
At some point, and we're coming up on six years, the buck stops with those in charge now.

Cheers,
-Jamie
