o, I'm looking seriously for a flying fader hardware controller for my home mixing rig. So, I get in touch with one of my friends who is an 'industry insider' that I still know from back when I was an 'industry insider.' Industry insider says, 'Hands down, now question, the Euphonix Artist series. They could double the price and sell them, couldn't use Logic without it.' I remind him that I'm not a Mac guy. He says PC support should be ready now, says he'll ask around.

I hear back, he says PC support was slated for April, the pushed back, now for late '08. He also says he swears he saw a pretty solid version of the Eucon software for the PC before, used with the Artist series. Then he opines that he thinks Euphonix/Apple/Logic did a 'nod and wink' deal to keep the product Mac only and that Euphonix is known as a 'Mac shop.'

Can anyone here confirm/deny any of this. It's stall the release (which would still be a bad choice). More likely they just don't have experienced PC driver programmers.

Or else it's a conspiracy...
