Why, after all, he was voted by BB as one of the top 100 guitarists of all time. Go figure.

ja and Gaucho, the best. Just awesomely beautiful all the way around.

For those who have not seen the Classic Albums DVD on Aja, you're missing one of the great documentaries ever filmed. "Pretty" Purdie's segment alone is worth the money. And Chuck Rainey describing how he sneaked in some slap/pop on "Peg"...truly priceless. Just really, really high levels of creativity on display, and such wonderful characters, so full of love of life, so charming. Becker and Fagen are hilarious...it's just a wonderful DVD. Micky McD (my boy, god I love his voice) describing the extremely difficult block harmonies he had to sing on "Peg"...Steve Gadd speaking of what a relief it was to be able to play with subtlety on a pop record and be thanked for it instead of reigned in constantly....

Let's hope, for your sake, that they are 68 pins. Much easier to replace the cables that way.

> Say, does anyone know whether you need to dither a 24bit signal to 20bit when sending audio back to PARIS via lightpipe (from Logic via and HDSP962 for example) ?

Thanks,
Stewart. After about a year of using a mix matrix that involves streaming audio that is being processed at 32 bit float in Cubase SX over a 20 bit lightpipe to be summed in Paris, here's my take on this:

I notice absolutely no sonic hit at all. I think this may be because there is some incredibly sophisticated stuff going on in the Paris DSP. It's really strange how this works. Paris can receive a signal at the ADAT input that is being processed in Cubase SX at 32 bit float above 0dBfs (it's not clipping in Cubase SX as long as it stays floating and doesn't hit the mix bus) and though this signal is technically being truncated to 20 bit, there is something going on in the Paris DSP that is apparently allowing the entire bit depth of whatever audio is received over lightpipe to be retained while the actual loudness of the signal is attenuated by -24dB. Well, this gives you an extra +24 dB of headroom to boost the signal again in Paris. It may be truncated, but it's something inaudible to my ears and what comes out of the Paris mix bus sounds HUGE because it sounds like multiple 32 bit audio tracks being boosted by up to 24dB and then summed analog.....at least, that's my take on it. I certainly notice no distortion/graininess at all. I did try instantiating a dither plugin on each Cubase audio track a while back and the cumulative dither of 20+ tracks sounded hissy and awful. It sounds like voodoo, and I know that bit can't be restored after truncation, but the extra 24dB of headroom that Paris provides makes it sound like it's doing exactly this, and then some. I knew there was something like this happening due to the additional headroom available but I wasn't sure how much the audible input signal level was being reduced until I talked to someone (who must remain anonymous right now) who has actually measured this.

anyway.....whatever is happening, it sounds awesome.

Personally, I've found that the Marshall MXL 603 mics to be excellent for live use and recording (drums and acoustic instruments). I bought a pair the day after I did a session for a guy who used them on my Taylor 410ce. The sound was HUGE. I don't think they can be beat for $199, including a pair of shock mounts and a nice carrying case.

Here's a link for where I purchased them:

Hope this helps!

I started the car, put it in reverse and it jerked and slammed me into a pole. I then tried to put it into drive and it just took off. Felt like the throttle body opened and I couldn't stop the car. I hit a 3 to 5 ton recycle bin about 20 yards later.

The scariest part was knowing that I was going to plow into the bin, but could do nothing but brace myself for the impact. I was really lucky that no one was in my path.well, see... I was thinking that was going to be my surprise bonus. Since I am using them live, a little free pyro never hurt nobody :) (yah, I know.. i know.. great white)

$119.95 for the pair.... not bad if they don't suck. Tried a pair personally

I felt that Studio Projects created a mic (with the c1) that appeared to sound great at first listen - especially to people with less experience with great mics - but actually had massive shortcomings that just didn't jump out like it's overblown high end did. I'd say they are a lot like Mackie that way. Those VLZ Pro boards sucked - but they sure sounded "crisp" and full at first listen. Too bad they were messing with the sound to make that happen.

So, I dunno about the Studio Projects mics.

Rode NT1, SP C-3 to match the sound.

The C-3 was the ticket and was almost = better for=20 this singer. He doesn't have the beef James has

so the low mid bump is almost desirable.

The accentuated top

is very Metallica

too. No Exciter needed! Maybe a little too crispy = but not=20 bad.

I don't think I'll need a = deesser. Maybe I=20 got a good C-3.

By the way it kicked 'a' on a hot = r&b female=20 vocalist recently. I didn't expect it.

Knowing Mackie pres, I wouldn't think = they'd be a=20 great match with a SP C3

I've been using it=20 through the Precision 8. The Neve was a little too = brittle.

Maybe the pre is the clincher = here? I haven't=20 tried my Telefunken V-72 yet...

Hmmm? Can you say metal=20 guitar?!?!

That's just me,

Tom

I = thought=20

the VLZ pro pres were "OK" if you weren't out the insert. = Something
in=20
 the rest of the board was making the low end sound bigger and adding=20
 what sounded like an upper mid bump. My belief (I have no = proof!) is=20
 that this was being done via phase tricks to make the board sound =
 "bigger"=20
 and "clearer"
in music stores without showing up in their spec =
 sheet. =20
 The board was "flat"
- but it sure didn't sound flat. I = imagine a=20
 mic with a lot of mids - like a 57 - would suffer from this more =
 than most=20
 mics.

As for the C1. I don't know if I got a bad one or=20 not. On mine, when I recorded an acoustic guitar, you could = hear that=20
 the low mids were much boomier than if I used my 4050 or my = slightly=20
 modded c3000s. I found myself using multiband compressors and = scooping=20
 out the mids to try to deal with the "splash" of low mid that would = pop out=20
 constantly.

What really bothers me about this is that = most=20
 people will hear a bright
high end much more easily than a boomy = mid=20
 range. So, if you aren't used to listening for the mids, the =
 mic=20
 sounds great - until you compare it to a mic with solid mids (or a=20 recording done with one).

I'm glad yours is working out for =
 you,=20
 though. It is certainly possible that mine just sucked. =
 There=20
 was a rumour that the first run of mics sounded better than the = later=20
 ones.

Cheers!

Mike

-----=_NextPart_000_0047_01C69643.73AA6580--You and I must have WAAAAY different sets of hearing perception - I've never heard any kind of Neve preamp that I would describe as "brittle". Wooly, Mushy, Smooth, Slow... maybe, but never brittle.

How was your experience in getting the C-1/C-3 to sit well in the mix? I had one of the earlier C-1's, and I thought the mic had good fidelity, and it was an exciting mic for singers to sing through (it comes across well in the cans), but I found it tough to get to "sit down" in the mix - and it was definitely a little harsh at times with that big 6k bump... mix-wise, it was just a beeyatch to find the pocket with that mic. DJ has my old one now & loves it though... right, DeeJ?
