>>Ike is a fascinating one. The most recent (and likely last) president who kinda sorta fit the classical model of a politician. He was a general, a political moderate, a reader, writer, and even a painter. He respected the constitution and the separation of powers, and was thus personally opposed to McCarthy but did little to stop what was a Congressional matter. What's odd was that he helped oversee the transformation of our state from a flawed but generally improving republic into the empire it became by the time he left office. Then, in that last speech, he suddenly felt
