I guess I just never paid that close attention to her. Did now.
Whoa....

pabl was listening to the radio one day when a pretty big hit tune ame on by a pretty famous female vocalist. I was driving my car and about every third or fourth phrase I'd hear a note and think "I would have tuned that...".
It was "The Greatest Love" by Whitney Houston who is, IMHO, a great singer.
It made me realize how Autotune (and quantizing and all of our other little studio tricks and tools) have changed the way we and everyone else hears music these days. Music doesn't have to be perfectly in tune or in time to be great. One of the important things that makes a Chicago blues shuffle sound different from a New Orleans second line shuffle or a big band swing shuffle is where the groove lays against "perfect" time. One of the most important things about blues in general is the tension created by "blue" notes.

Of course, we all know that. My big complaint about Autotune (and perhaps quantizing and Beat Detective which, thank God, we don't have in Paris!!!)
is that now people expect to be able to march into the studio, deliver a mediocre performance, and leave with a "perfect", radio ready, finished product.
I've had people tell me that if I can't tune them they'll go elsewhere to work. And I'm talking about talented singers who are capable of getting it right! So if I don't Autotune I don't work. I don't mind tuning a note here and there to save a good singer from burning out during overdubs. I don't mind tweaking a harmony to make a chord sound sweet. And being able to make average music sound a lot better certainly brings me business. And God knows, I need the business. But it get's tiresome sometimes.

Not to mention the repetitive motion stress related problems I have now because I sit all day mousing and clicking to fix all this stuff!!! We're not recording engineers anymore - We're data entry clerks!

I actually had to do a search, then I found it. Watching now...

As you were.

pabIMHO, the Christopher Cross phenomena was one of those deals where songwriter meets the right producer. I had heard most of the songs on the first album, but not like that. O'Martian's production brought that material to life and made him a star. One of my clients here worked with him many years ago when he was at the top of his game in the 80's and has told some pretty great stories about how brilliant he thought O'Martian was/is.....not that he still might not be.....I just don't know. I don't hear much on the radio these days that I think he would be a party to, but maybe he is and I'm just not paying attention. I was glad to see Chris Geppert and his band make it big. They were good and they worked hard for a long time before they got their shot, though as usually happens, the band got short shrift and faded back into the fabric of the working musicians while the songwriter got the lions share of the recognition and $$$.

Hey.....he deserved it.....it's the biz and he wrote songs that resonated with the times (especially with the right producer). Good for him.

>You're right about that, proolly (good match between the artist & producer), but another thing that I think contributed is that I think that was really the "era of the soft singer".

Off the top of my head...
Boz Scaggs had a couple of non-"Lido Shuffle" sappy ballads that hit in that era.
Steve Miller (who sang VERY soft for a rocker-ish kinda guy) still was getting airplay.
Lionel Richie all over the place during that time.
Leo Sayer had his last hit or two around then.
Bob Welch - sappy Sentimental ballad & "Ebony Eyes" were around

then, IIRC.

Michael McFrickin'Donald singing on all the Doobie's mellow stuff (apart from on everyone who could get him to do backups).

Rupert Holmes (no, mutherfucker I DON'T like Pina Coladas!!!).

Pre-Thriller M.J. ("Rock with You" that was pretty soft-sung).

Kenny Rogers' "Lady" was a hit the same year.

Robbie Dupree "Why don't we Steal Away... Steeeeeal Aaaaawaay... into the night" (c'mon, I know you wanna sing a long".

George Benson - Gimme the Night.

Kool & the Gang - "You know yer Too Hot... too hot, Lady".

Geez, I think I could list another hundred... all these were pretty soft-sung songs. Maybe I should rename it the "era of the sensitive male" lol

Was Alan Alda making movies during that time? ROFL song..

Just his/her nuances and playing in-between the clicks on-time, can humanize a stale robotic track..
