Gene, that's absurd. You just passed the 5-year anniversary of the worst attack on americans in history, and you can't even grant the president the motive of protecting the rest of us?

I'm probably being overly pessimistic due to lack of sleep. How ideology plays out over the long term is a bit unknown (as in, I really don't know - just gut feeling), but I hope you are right: that as a world community we will diminish the threat from Al Quaeda, if not terrorism in general.

As to relativism - I probably do make it sound more prevalent than it is - I can't claim to have a broad enough scope for that to be any more than conjecture. I actually wasn't inferring that relativism does, or would ever just ify suicide bombers, and I don't know anyone in this country who does.

Relativism to me is more about the tide of overall softening of values for the sake of redefining social acceptability. It really is mainly about values and morals, rather than cultural change, though they could be considered of the same family, or even one in the same from time to time.

There are a lot of great people in this country regardless of widely varying beliefs, and you are right - we have a lot of fortitude and desire to maintain the freedoms and quality of life we have here. That's the cool aspect of this forum - even though we all disagree from time to time, we do have that in common - we want our country to be a great place to live, work, raise a family, play, etc, and that is an encouraging common theme in most of these threads.

e religions may just be saying the same thing about you and your religion. For those religions who are not tolerant of other ideas, you may just have started a war.

So perhaps it's BETTER, in our time, to have a system of justice that is NOT based on a religion. But one which guarantees everyone the right to practice the religion of their choice, guarantees other freedoms such as we in the USA do in our Bill of Rights, encourages honesty and integrity, while enforcing some common sense limits such as no human sacrifices, a minimum age for marriage, no incest, no slavery, no murder, no rape, no stealing, those sorts of things.

What is viewed as morality beyond a fair justice system and common sense rules of behavior can be left to each freely chosen religion to sort out, like whether to restrict diet in some way, whether to wear a certain type of clothing, how to pray, etc. But none of these additional practices should be imposed on society as a whole.

The Golden Rule may also be of use as a basic moral foundation.

So yes, you can have a moral system, one that BTW protects the freedom to practice religious beliefs (or not), without basing it on any one religion. And it can protect all religi

Still unable to get through to the Asus people about IRQs, still trying.

Today I will try the one EDS card in the other three slots, one by one. If things go well in each slot, can I just throw all four of my EDS cards in their at once (I still have the four of them linked together with little EDS cables, just the same as I pulled them out), or is there some special routine I have to follow? The manual doesn't make utter sense to me on this >Martin, I don't think I know enough to make a good pick. I'm just very interested in the diplomacy side of things and I remember as a kid it seemed to be a part of the news that I don't seem to see today. So I'm just wondering aloud who is a real diplomat of today.

I like this story a lot:

There was once a very famous Aikido player in Japan who spent his whole life studying Usheba's legendary art. Although he had dedicated his whole existence to this beautiful art he had never actually had occasion to test it in a real life situation against a determined attacker, someone intent on hurting him. Being a moralistic kind of person he realised that it would be very bad karma to actually go out and pick a fight just to test his art so he was forced to wait until a suitable occasion presented itself. Naively, he longed for the day when he was attacked so that he could prove to himself that Aikido was powerful outside of the controlled walls of the dojo.

The more he trained, the more his obsession for validation grew until one day, travelling home from work on a local commuter train, a potential situation did present itself -an overtly drunk and aggressive man boarded his train and almost immediately started verbally abusing the other passengers. 'This is it,' the Aikido man thought to himself, 'this is my chance to test my art.'

He sat waiting for the abusive passenger to reach him. It was inevitable that he would: he was making his way down the carriage abusing everyone in his path. The drunk got closer and closer to the Aikido man, and the closer he got the louder and more aggressive he became. Most of the other passengers recoiled in fear of being attacked by the drunk. However, the Aikido man couldn't wait for his turn, so that he could prove to himself and everyone else, the effectiveness of his art. The drunk got closer and louder. The Aikido man made ready for the seemingly inevitable assault -he readied himself for a bloody encounter.

As the drunk was almost upon him he prepared to demonstrate his art in the ultimate arena, but before he could rise from his seat the passenger in front of him stood up and engaged the drunk jovially. 'Hey man, what's up with you? I bet you've been drinking in the bar all day, haven't you? You look like a man with problems. Here, come and sit down with me, there's no need to be abusive. No one on this train wants to fight with you.'

The Aikido man watched in awe as the passenger skillfully talked the drunken man down from his rage. Within minutes the drunk was pou
