I may also buy a Alfatrack. It's only $200.00 street, and it's small.

In India, would that be considered sacrilege? I understand the spices would probably make it more palatable at least.

of all, this
slick little film was written and directed by well-known anti-environmentalist Martin Durkin, who is in trouble now with some of the experts he used in the film for misrepresenting them by editing their sequences.

The most amusing part of this was his answer to the "better safe than sorry" approach -- that if by fighting global warming we doom the Third World to poverty by preventing development. AS IF the anti-environmentalists and the corporations funding the global warming denyers give a flying f about people in the Third World for anything other than another market to exploit. Yes, we all know that without the burning of fossil fuels, there is no possibility of progress. Gimme a friggin' break.

Greed kills, people. Follow the money.

Cool. This makes me think of three things:

- 1) Memes in our vocabulary.
- 2) Following the money.
- 3) Examining the scientific consensus.

MEMES

Phrases like "bad science" and "junk science" are often used by PR flacks paid by fossil fuel lobbies. Previously those sorts of phrases were used by PR flacks paid by tobacco lobbies. It's an interesting connection...

From: <http://www.cbc.ca/fifth/denialmachine/index.html>

"Who is keeping the debate of global warming alive?
The documentary shows how fossil fuel corporation

d both sound right but I can't make sense of it."

TIA,

Mic.Form SR copyrights the recording itself. To copyright the individual songs, use PA. You can do both - that's what the language in the SR instructions is referring to, not that it replaces PA.

Technically a song is copyrighted when written, but for legal safekeeping, filing the forms is the safest way to go.

You can use form PA to copyright a collection of songs, listing the collection title and each song title in the collection. Technically that isn't the same as copyrighting each individual song, but I believe (though can't guarantee), it may serve the same purpose. A lawyer would be best for that determination.

not true, as far as I can see what they're doing many places here in Europe. They will not follow the guarantee laws in different countries here and is suing their resellers to pay for the difference, if the guarantee-period is longer than their own. I know different resellers in Norway will not sell Apple products anymore just because of these problems, when reparations over a year have eaten up more than their whole sellingprofit on Appleproducts. So the other side of the Apple name is not as glorious as your believings about the firm;-)
