nothing secured under the word "avidrecording." No products, trademarks, fixed medium or not, tangible or intangible. Notta.

I might add, I am surprised having found "hotguitartracks" available as .com ..net and .org

BTHi Mark, I wish you the best but I'm not sure about the avidrecording name not infringing. I owned "microsoftsuperstore.com" for a few months and then decided that i would be sued or something. My non-existent law knowledge led me to believe that even if it's similar in the same market then it's actionable. Like if I did AvidTennisShoes.com then there is no chance they will lose market share from customer confusion. My impression was that if it was arguable that a customer in the same market could be confused then it was actionable.

heheYes, that's pretty much what I thought.

It isn't "actual", it's "intent".

I must say, when I saw the name at first, I immediately thought of "Avid" (Digi), so I can't have been the first, (or the last).

Have you had 'Top shelf' legal advice on this?

A quick post to stay in the count.

There are also three other local studios besides mine in town still running
PARIS as well.

I still run a PARIS 8 card/13slot magma rig with 6 MECs and 8 c16's coupled with the old faithful Cubase rig linked thru ADAT sync and four Adat i/o cards and lots of analog i/o cards but have also migrated to a PT HD3 system on a smoking Mac Pro dual quad core system.

I've hung on for about as long as I could.

I'm afraid the PARIS rig's lights are going to go cold and dim.

"Long Live P.A.R.I.S."

Thanks for keeping hope alive!
