wanted to change to a different policy and now I've got to stay with what I've got for a while. What I'm doing now is more like "my diet" than "a diet", actually because it's pretty much what was a normal diet for me about 20 years ago and it just sorta evolved naturally when I was just a young sprouthead.. No red meat.or chicken.....just lots of fruit, nuts, raw veggies and the occasional boiled egg and some cheese now and then.....but mostly raw foods and juices. I broke out the juicer that had been gathering dust for many years (though I will buy the more high quality bottled Knudsen stuff occasionally for convenience). Energy levels way up. I've lost 9 pounds in the last 14 days and I haven't been hungry at all. I had forgotten how much those heavy greasy foods slowed me down and how crappy they made me feel. At some point my life got wayyyyy to busy, these kinds of food were easier and more convenient and I just lost my dietary focus.....but no.....you're not gonna catch me wearin' patchouli.

I figure, to put it in perspective, whipping up a quick and healthy meal is much easier than reading a &^%$#*&^(!& Roland manual.

;o)Many of us started out like you, DJ. It is sort of addictive. The more you know, the more you want to know.

Truthfully, I think my indulgence in technology has hurt my playing by occupying the time I would have spent playing and practicing. My recordings sound better but I have to punch more than I would like. Don't even get me started on this newsgroup...

Well, to put it in perspective another way: sometimes achieving world peace, winning the Powerball, and being nominated for a Grammy is easier than reading a Roland manual.

:)Well, he's not going to be checking his e-mail for awhile yet, I would imagine... he's going to be in the hospital for a week or two, depending on his early progress.

That's why I was asking if anyone had a phone # - if anyone knew him well enough to call his house & ask the family, etc.
