Since when is it Ok for a Klansmen to be in public office? I guess only when is suits your agenda. It sure wasn't Ok for David Duke to run for office!!!

 He was no longer a Klansmen. It's funny how, when it suits people it's Ok.

It reminds me of something I once saw when I was down south when Clinton was in office. The sign said, Only in America can you have a draft dodger living in the white house and veterans living in cardboard boxes.

A former Klansmen is Ok by you? I wonder if he ever murdered anybody???

I believe in punishing criminals not law abiding citizens.

FYI, I am a service connected disabled vet - plainly, I gave up the majority of my mobility in the line of duty, so that others could express themselves as they wish..

Another FYI, I have been met and interacted with those from the former East Germany and the former Czechoslavakia, both socialist satellites...and exactly 100% of those people I met from communist/dictatorships thanked the US for assisting in the enabling of their freedoms...

Sadly, those very people are more grateful for the US than most people living in it today...

And, from me, my father (highly decorated WW2 and Korean War vet), and my brother (Vietnam vet) you are welcome. I stand by my words, I stand by my nation.

must go to war we should get it over with quickly.

I don't think you should ever commit to war unless you are willing to win

it. There is no substitute for victory! You have to be willing to kill women and children wholesale, you can't hold back or flinch. You can't win playing patty cakes, you have to do what ever it takes. That's why I think war is a vary bad thing. I also think it's the vary last thing to do. The USA has lost it's will to win wars.

The democrats started a war against the republicans before we ever went in to Iraq. It was for their own selfish political gains. A country can't govern if it is divided against it's self. We can't win wars or anything else this way. I'm tire of hearing how they will work together, it's bullshit.
 They work together and stay in power by pointing the fingers at each other.
 We need all new government. A government that is for the peopl

Well this is the thing, I don't appear to be able to do it on my own. With the exception of people here, I don't really know anybody who's actually "in the industry" as a professional. I know a fair number of people in bands, some struggling, and every now and again one of my friends gets some moderate success and does national tours for a while, but, well, quite honestly, on the occasions where people actually go "Yeah, damned, that's a good tune!" they then go "Tell you what, I'll take 70% and make it a hit for you" and I'm like "Err, no you won't" and the discussion ends. Maybe not 70% all the time, but people seem to want a stupidly high percentage simply for the fact that they are the gatekeeper. I've been pushed into song writing partnerships I didn't want to be in simply so that someone else could get their hands on the cash. It all sucks, and I've had enough. I have, however (I think / hope) maintained the rights to pretty much all my stuff, and hence I have a fairly large library of songs I've written and recorded. Much of it would need to be rerecorded for submission, but the tunes exist, and are mine still.

I know this has all been said before, but the percentages which go to a songwriter are low enough to begin with. I think in the states the figures are slightly different, but here 6.25% of the disk price goes to the songwriter. Now out of that I find that often they want to cut it in half before they start "just because we're giving you a chance" and then they want to take another 20% or so for "production" (why does that come out of my share? I ask them... Oh, no answer. Thought as much...) and then of course the publisher will take another 20% of whatever amount I may have left.

6.25% x 50% - 20% - 20% = 2%

So I'd end up with 2% of disk sales. Now I know that on a big hit 2% of disk sales can be 2% of a lot of money, but it seems beyond stupidity and way beyond fairness that the songwriter only gets under 1/3 of the money which in itself is the actual songwriting money. I can understand a publisher taking an administrative cut and I'm fine with that. Beyond that I would have thought that most of the money should belong to the writer.

OK, now I'm just ranting. ;o)

My point however is that I can't do it on my own. I don't know the right people it seems. And I'm also not a pushy person, and hence don't force myself upon people. If people ask about me then I'll play them something. If they don't then I don't tend to go "Hey such and such, would you mind listening to..." which appears to be what you have to do.

What I cannot work out is why everybody puts up with it, because MOST people complain about it.

Don't get me wrong, I know there are a lot of shit artists out there who are doing a lot of complaining because they think they deserve something when really they don't. I'd be willing to accept that I'm one of them if not for the fact that I do seem to get, shall we say, the occasional "offer to be ripped off" which makes me think that I obviously have something worth ripping off.

Sometimes I wonder if I'm the last human being on Earth who thinks people should be fair and reasonable to each other. Don't get me wrong, if I earned $5,000,000 from a song I'd give a lot away, but not to these greedy people...

....I'd quite possibly start my own label. No wonder the Beatles had to do it. One wonders however "How long must we sing this song?". Why don't the actual MAJOR artists, the big guys, actually make a stand and go "Nup, it's unfair". I know they get decent deals, but don't they have hearts? There are bands out there that claim to care about the world and issues, yet they don't seem to care about their own industry.

OK, rant mode OFF!

The point is that at least with these guys I'm paying a set amount and they don't take a percentage. I find that reassuring. They're not asking to own my catalogue or take 50% or anything in order to do their job. Quite honestly, $5 a song sounds pretty cheap if they're going to write any kind of even half decent critique. The song itself is probably 3-4 minutes long, add the time to put it in the player and muck about, and then writing the critique, and it must take at least 10 probably 15 minutes to do. That means they're making $20 an hour assuming they are at it all day, and it means that $5 is only buying you about 5-10 minutes of their time to write the critique. I wouldn't expect every critique to be a novel...

I dunno, the more I think about it the more reasonable it sounds.

I hear what you're saying about the record execs not liking TAXI, though I assume you're talking fairly much about one particular label. Even if only 5% of A&R people really pay attention to them, that's about 6% more people than are paying attention to me now...

Cheers,
Kim.

I guess it really depends on how well your music fits.
Mine never did.
I spent a lot of money for nothing more than a lot of spent time and I got a couple good critiques.
I learned the best way to shop music is in person.
You really need to go to nashville or one of the other type music cities where the songwriting business gathers.
I never had any luck and eventually quit shopping my tunes cause postage and envelopes and CDs and labels and business cards and promo packets and submission fees etc.. broke me.

Dont mean to put a damper on the subject..
my luck hasn been so good...I hope you find success!!
bCuMix is a software console that allows zero (actually a few samples of delay) latency monitoring using MOTU hardware. I use it with Digital Performer, which controls it automatically. You should have a detailed manual that came with the MOTU I/O box or the upgraded PCI card (if you have a new 424). This is how you get rid of the recording delay, but not while using VST plugins.

Mmm, there is a "shareware" one. I assume it's time limited, though I will try it and see. It only has limited support for ASR disks, in that you need another free utility to read and write the disks. That's ok for one off's but not ideal if it's a part of your regular workflow.

I'll do a comparison though. Thanks for the tip.

Cheers,
Kim.

Hey Kim,

We did Taxi for a while. I have met and talked to Michael Laskow on numerous occasions when he was holding seminars at the durango songwriters expo here (I have been on the volunteer staff of this for a number of years). Taxi psovided some decent feedback, but unless you're willing/able to write for the artist when they say they are looking for material, I'd say its not going to be of much good to you. You never know. I think success would depend on how prolific you are and how familiar you are with the previous material of various artists. They (meaning the record companies) all seem to be wanting to recreate the wheel when it comes to looking for new material....always trying to replicate earlier successes.

My suggestion would be to hook up with a songwriters group in your area that sponsors events that can help you meet publishers. the schmooze factor is huge in the industry. There are thousands of songwriters. Unless it's an exceptional song, it won't get the nod over another song that is written by someone with connections/a proven track record (as long as they can right great songs, of course). Everyone will tell you it's all about the song.....it's not.....it's partially about the song but also about who you know if you got "the song".

We used to be involved pretty heavily with the Austin Songwriters Group (Amy was on the board of directors back in the 90's). At one of the seminars, a really wonderful individual named Dianne Petty who was Vice-President/Creative of SESAC heard one of Amy's songs and really liked it. She called up us, took us to dinner and it was the beginning of a very interesting relationship that involved getting a few of Amy's songs pitched to some heavy hitters in Nashville. We wound up with a number of songs being picked up by various publishers due to this fortunate encounter. Of course, without the song that seemed to fit something that someone was looking for, nothing would have happened. This story isn't over yet, but it has been put on hold for a while. It hasn't been made any easier by us moving to the middle of nowhere, but luckily, this particular area is becoming more and more inhabited by folks that know folks that we know in places where music gets published so we've sitll got a line in the water, so to speak. You have to get out there and schmooze. Face time is a must.

DeejA couple of years ago you provided me the name of "the guy* in New Jersey for Ampeg repair. I've lost the name. I need to send him some $$.

Thanks,

DeejI hear you Kim. You can always submit your material to record companies and publishing companies. I think you should try that first, just to see what happens. It takes a combination of things to get a record deal, but some people get lucky just by sending in a CD with a good bio.

I guess it depends on what you want to do with your music. Do you want to be a performing artist, or do you just want to sell or license your songs?

I think you should talk to Martin H. about this, he has had some success down in Oz in the past. I bet he might be able to give you some good ideas about how to go about it and who to contact down there. I have a feeling he knows some people. I'd get your best stuff together. Start with a two to three song demo CD.

Have you red all the books on how to promote and sell your music? The ones I've read are so damed dated that I couldn't recommend them, but maybe somebody here can. As far as TAXI, if you can afford to spend the money, why not.
 It can't hurt.

Unfortunately, it's all about air play and promotion. Here in the US a special group of privilege people have firm control, and my government protects their interests with the FCC. Only songs from major labels get played on a regular basis, and you can't open your own radio station either. Even if you had a million dollars you would have a vary hard time opening a radio station in a major market. Radio is how music sells, and they keep the average joe out. The only way to get some kind of air play is internet radio, and It's a bit of a shot in the dark.

If you have away to get radio air play, it's key.

You really have no idea how bad I am with "face time". I'm a strange kind of bloke. ;o) Well, perhaps I'm not THE worst socialiser in the world generally speaking (though I'm not great at it) but I really am no good with meeting people generally, and completely and utterly hopeless at remembering names. Perhaps I'm delving too deep into other issues here, but it really takes me months (or years) of getting to know somebody before I feel half comfortable with them. By the time I get to know somebody, some other person has the contract...

....indeed I have the same problem with women, though that's another story. ;o)

Seriously, I can't even remember somebody's name. In some sense I feel I'm like "socially autistic" or some such thing. I happen to be very good with listening to a style of music and emulating it however, often spookily so. There have been times when I've attempted to write songs in the style of somebody else (twice that comes to mind) where I've actually ended up with the same lyrics almost, but off some B side or some album which I've been absolutely certain I haven't heard previously. I don't really need to be intimately familiar with the work to copy somebody. I can buy a disk and fairly much listen for a day and go "OK, so they use these patterns, these rhythms, these subjects, these scales, these beats. Go!" and write a song to match.

....but unless some psychologist somewhere is able to fix my head, then if "face time" is the requirement, I'm simply not going to get my foot in the door I don't think.

I'm not up to date with new artists particularly either, but I don't feel I have to be to write songs, as I can "get up to date" in a day or so with a given sound sufficiently to copy the sound. I'll have forgotten it two weeks later, but does that matter if the song gets written? ...but a publisher is going to lose confidence if they speak with me and say "So I was thinking a song like this one..." and I'm like "Never heard of it. Which band? Who's that?". "That's the band we were talking about yesterday. It's their current number one smash hit". "Oh, them". I'll end up looking like a goose, and even if I write the best song in the world they'll go "Oh, here's that song written by that goose"... ;o)

Perhaps I'm insane to even think it's worth the effort for me. Maybe I'm just venting the frustration of years of song writing and recording while listening to such garbage on the airwaves so often.

I had another idea to sell some songs, which may suit me better. I probably won't get as much money, but if I could make a living I'd be a happy man...

....well, happier...

Thanks for the info though. Appreciated.

Cheers,

I don't know how it works in the states, but down here they all say "No unsolicited material" on a large neon sign hanging from a blimp which hovers over the company HQ. How they find artists I am unsure, but given I rarely play anywhere I guess I'd be hard to find.

>If you have away to get radio air play, it's key.

Well I happen to work at the highest rating commercial music station in the country, but we're in a small dungeon underneath a pile of rubble (well, my previous lunch wrappers actually) in the back right corner where nobody can see or hear us... and the station in question plays music almost, but not quite, completely unlike the styles I like. ;o)

Mind you there are possible avenues there I guess if I can hold out long enough...

Thanks heaps for the advice though. I hope I don't sound ungrateful in my pessimism. ;o)

Kim.

Maybe the problem in fact is that I'm simply not that good at music, comparatively, and I'm just one in the long line of artists and/or people in general who would love to make a living from their hobby but cannot. Perhaps I'm just miffed at the world because people have to do things which they don't like doing in order to make a living and make life liveable...

Maybe I'm just a self centred dreamer who thinks that we should all just be able to do what we feel like and not have to work so hard or worry so much. Perhaps I'm unrealistic and/or stupid. Perhaps my expectations were set too high because people used to make such a big deal of my musical talents from so young (and still do often) and hence I somehow just assumed it would all just somehow happen. Perhaps...

Maybe I'm just miffed because I'm broken hearted and writing depressing love songs which I personally find touching but which really don't mean much to anybody but me, but I'm blaming a failed music career for my unhappiness when it's really about a girl...

Maybe I should just calm down and shut up. ;o)

I dunno...

I did all the same things in the past. That doesn't work. The truth is you have to live there, you can't just be a visiter/ tourist and make it happen if your an artist.

Many people get signed different ways, and under different circumstances. Here it is guys, I'm giving it away right here, right now. Here is a formula to getting signed:

You have to live in a music city you have to become part of the seen. You need to have quite a bit of money and friends to help you! You need to promote the crap out of your music. You have to create a huge buzz about your band/music. You have to have good songs, that fit in to a radio format. You will need some radio air play. If your an artist you have to have STAR QUALITY!!! You need to be able to draw a lot of people on a regular basis. You need to set up A&R show cases. (IE. show case parties at the Hilton completely catered.) You need to know the A&R people and they better know about you.

You must have the songs, be a great performer, be able to sing well, have the right look, you must have STAR QUALITY!!! Get some air Play. You must create a huge buzz about your self in the A&R community and you will have an A&R feeding frenzy on your hands. This will take a lot of belief, tenacity, lots of money and about 3 to 4 years of hard work. I just told you what it takes to get signed. You might think this stuff is obvious, but many try to get signed without all of these things in place, and you can't. If you have all of the above then you have a good chance of getting signed to a major label.

When there is a buzz about an artist, A&R guys are easy to spot sometimes, there the guys with the folded up contract in their back pockets. You have to watch them, A&R guys will pull some stuff. If an A&R guy ever pulls a contract out and tells you, you have five minutes to sign the contract or it will be rescinded, DON'T SIGN IT!!!Ask him for his business card if you don't have it, then politely say, not with out my attorney. Take the contract to an attorney to have it reviewed, you'll learn a lot.

There is so much I could say about this subject, but I'm going to put the breaks on here.Dude, we've all been there! And some of us keep going back! Keep writing, that's how the best stuff comes out. It's in those moments. We can all relate.

I think you're right. I've seen friends of mine come close to pulling this off. A recent band I know did all of the above. They had one member who did a year or two basically as a session muso in a reasonably well known act, and then started his own thing with some other guys. They worked exceptionally hard doing whatever they could think of. They got every gig they could find. They put posters all over the city and I still see posters for them up everywhere. They rehearsed hard and played a lot. They got close. They still may make it, though they're going through some rough times currently, but they did all of the above...

This old fella on the other hand ain't interested in all that. I don't want to be a "rock star". If I got signed as a writer I'd probably use some kind of pen name or some such thing. I don't want to be rich or famous.

I just would like to earn a basic living off making music that I half like for, err, whatever it is that people want it for, other than advertising or other things with which I have moral issues. Films? Docos? Australian Idol or the plethora of other singers who don't write, which seem so commonplace these days. I hear so many songs on the radio where I think "That's barely even a song. It's all just production" and what have you.

I had a complain about percentages earlier, but really I don't care about the money. I care about the principle. I care about some other sap getting the money when all they have contributed is keeping their fists clenched around the throat of the market so that nobody can get in without their say so. I refuse to let these people rip me off on principle, and the principle is that if EVERYBODY refused to let them do it, they couldn't do it. The human race shoots themselves in the foot with their own greed sometimes.

I don't even care if it's song writing really, but that just seems the most likely avenue, though my production quality should improve with the new gear arriving soon so maybe I could actually do music for some visual medium or something.

Or maybe, as I said, I'm really no good and just having a big sook. ;o)

Cheers,
Kim.

>Jeff,

I'm sorry to hear it, though it does make me feel better.

The thing is sometimes I hear things and go "This change that's being made is stupid" and I KNOW I'm right. I've been in bands, for example, and written a melody, and the singer will of course have to replace it with some two note drone with an interest factor of 2 out of 10, and you walk away and the whole rest of the band is going "Your melody was better". The whole thing just sucks.

I'll be the first to admit that I spent my late teens are early twenties wanting to drive my musical bus like a nazi. I wanted all the money, all the control, all the praise, and other people could be involved only if they did exactly as I told them. Often this wasn't a problem as I tended to be in bands where everybody was happy to do that, but still...

Now however if people want to sing... whatever... I don't mind so much. I'm over it. I've accepted I'm not the world's best singer or guitarist. I have a fair idea I think of where I am strong and where I am weak musically, but finding people who are happy to fill those gaps is also a big struggle, especially if the criteria is also that they need to understand themselves which areas they are and are not good at. Perhaps I'm lucky because one of the areas I am good at is "the overview" so I have a fair idea usually when somebody (often me ;o) sucks at something. ;o)

If everybody would just do their homework, learn their craft, and then focus on their strong areas and not infringe other people's space...

....oh, I'm dreaming again aren't I. ;o)

Perhaps I should burn these pictures of this girl... ;o)

Cheers,
Kim.

about an old dude who always wanted to go up in an airplane at the county to $10 dollars but it wife thought it was too much to spend saying "$10 dollars is $10 dollars". every year they would go to the fair and he would ask about the flying thing and her reply was always the same "$10 dollars is $10 dollars". so one year he tells her that he is 76 years old and he's probably running out of time.

this time the pilot of the plane overhears their conversation and makes this offer. "i'll take you both up for free if neither one of you says a word during the flight. if you say one word i'll charge you the $10 dollars". the couple agree and he takes them up. while flying he does every trick he knows and nothing, not a word from either. so he does each maneuver again with the same results, silence so he lands the plane. with he and the old man standing face to face the pilot says "i tried everything i could to scare the two of you and nothing so i guess the ride is free but how did the both of you stay so quiet. the old man replied "i almost did yell when we flew upside down the first time and my wife fell out but $10 dollars is $10 dollars".

>Kim.You have no failed music carrer - it's just a different one than what you thought it would be... so in order to further your career, I have three pieces of advice for you:

1.) Keep writing & playing that kind of stuff which you love the most, for your own personal gratification.

2.) Charge people in order to be of assistance to their own efforts (whether it be in the engineering, producing, or arranging realms), and in that manner you have a musicallyrelated income stream of some level; this of course varies from one area or market to another.

3.) Pick one or two projects a year that you want to do or free, just to help them out, because you like their stuff... whether it be a band that you're tracking & mixing in a most kick-ass manner or a solo artist that you're composing & arranging a couple of songs for... that way you get the altrusitic warm & fuzzies, and get to stay creative on someone else's behalf without regard to monetary issues.

4.) Find a different girl. (OK, that was four... I only promised three, so that one's a bonus) :)

#1 gives you emotional & spiritual fulfillment, #2 gets you some material gains & third-party validation for your skills, and #3 gets you the feel-good/charitable vibes & good karma.
(and #4 gets you layed).

If that isn't a full life, I don't know what is.

>I see your point...

I am sure I'll keep writing stuff. What I probably SHOULD do is at least send some to RRR and/or PBS our independent community stations. That might at least get me some airplay...

I'm only half in a position to charge people at the moment. Perhaps I could get into making backing tracks for 1 & 2 peice cover bands or something, but I'm not placed to record much more than solo or 2 piece acts. I have no drum room yada yada as the studio is small. I didn't really enjoy the process of recording random acts anyhow, so in a sense I'm relieved about that. It's good experience though, and at least if you get a bad act you can walk away thinking "Well, I feel better about my own music now". ;o)

I do try and keep involved with the odd project I enjoy, but to be honest I'm stupidly fussy. ;o) Fortunately some of my closest musical friends are looking at buying Paris systems at the moment due to the cheap prices and the fact that you can get a lot of inputs for little money. None of them use MIDI anyhow, so Paris is kinda good enough for what they need for home studios. If that all happens I'll have an excellent drummer, guitarist, and vocalist on tap with whom I can interchange tracks to get parts laid down. That may spur me along a little.

As for the girl, I suppose if I said ..."but she was like a dream come true..." oh never mind. ;o) I think I need to put some more effort in to improving my women skills, but that is, as I keep saying, another story. ;o)

Thanks for the advice, and especially the laugh. I needed a laugh. ;o)

Cheers,
Kim.

Hey, how do we know if you're any good or not? Where are the songs?

As far as making a living from your hobby, I can tell you this: as soon as I stopped trying to make money with my music, I started making much better music and much more of it, probably because I was doing it for me instead of chasing the lastest music fashions around. There are millions of people out there competing for attention for their music, and lots of them are pretty talented. Unfortunately, very few of them will "make it big" no matter how good they are. It matters more how cute you are and how well you conform to current trends.

That may sound cynical, but I feel nothing but liberated since I decided to ignore trends and make music based on what I want to hear. Interestingly, when I did that, my friends liked the music better, too.

Listen to your heart and your gut and make music that expresses the essence of you.

If that doesn't work, you can always get some evil clown costumes and start a KISS tribute band.

Hugs,

Sarah

I use the translator software from chicken systems.
It works fine for batch processing (translating) large libraries fom one sampler format to another.
They have a pretty extensive list of compatible formats.
I also own an ASR10 but have never felt a need to use an outside editor because of how logical the edit menu is.
I do understand that the translator software was designed as a second party program to assist ASR users.
The "flow" is quite different from an Ensoniq mindset though.
When you get things rolling let me know.
I would love to exchange sounds.

Andy Pow

On the other hand, $300 isn't that much money. Might be worth a shot. I don't know if I could deal with any negative feedback, though. :)

Dennis worked in the Ampeg factory in Linden, New Jersey as quality control specialist and Service Manager and very well may have had his hands on your amp once before. Dennis asks, though, that you not call him about parts--he doesn't have the tremolo modules, grille cloth, logoplates, etc. that might be missing or damaged on your amp. "these parts were tough to get before these amps became antiquity," So don't call him for parts, but if you can get your amp to him, you probably won't find better service.
He also designed amps for Pignose and Sundown Amplifiers.

Say hi for me - Dennis is one of the good ones.

>Kim,

From your previous post to me on the "Taxi" thread, I gather that you are a bit of an introvert. I'm of an introverted nature too until I get to know people.

Find a group of people to start working with. Take it slowly and get to know them. Then just keep plugging away at your songwriting and compositions or whatever else. It's good that you can write "for an artist or genre". That's a considerable talent and one I noticed in some of your material that I have heard. ....and the best piece of advice aws far as love and life goes is to do what you do for the sake of doing it without haviing expectations of others. It's hard to do, but when I practice this, I end up being much happier and more creative.....and things that I would never dream could happen in a million years (good things, mind you) start falling in my lap. I find that when I try too hard to make things happen, they never do. when I just put it out there without expectations, things happen...just not necessarily what "I" had in mind.....which is often a good thing ;oD

Writing from the heart is what writers do. Don't be afraid to feel and don't be afraid to write about how you feel. It's OK. You might never use it, or it might be the next "One For The Road" for the next Frank Sinatra.

I have a 6" x 8"of the link below framed and sitting on the meter bridge of my studio, just to keep things in perspective:

http://despair.com/insanity.html

I need to be reminded of this on a dialy basis or I will take the actions of myself and others wayyyyy too seriously.

;o)
Hang in there

Sometimes thngs that seem too good to be true....actually are. The tinking that distrubs me the most is his archaic thinking on "declarations of war".
Just because an entity attacks you that isn't a soveriegn state, does not mean that you have not been attacked and does not meant that you are not at war.

Even sad songs are written by optimists...

The act of creating is an inherently hopeful one. Sad songs are theater, NOT an expression of reality. Depression makes us write sh*t that no one else will ever care about.

Wrote a song years ago called "Iron Rose" about a girl who was very destructive of her life (and mine). I thought it was heavy, angry. and evil sounding, but it never felt right, so one day I asked the punker kid drummer I was working with; "what do you think this song is about"?

Ummmm, well, it sounds like it is you crying 'cuz some girl kicked yer guts out"....

I was stunned... He was right.

F*ck this sh*t! said I. And I started to think about why I first started writing, and that brought me back to remembering how excited I once was about living... Of how physical and strong I once was, both in body and spiritually. I remembered finishing a karate kata with a huge yell that shook the building while sweat ran down my nose. I remembered deadlifting the motor to my BMW, 3 steps at a time, out to the car from my kitchen, hooking it up to the lift and three hours later driving the car home for Christmas... I remembered the girl with the strawberry blonde hair who wanted me so bad, her face was flushing red... Jeez she was beautiful... And here I was whining about my life.

And I played the riff to that song again, forgetting all my troubles, and simply asked, "what is this music about, what does it sound like"?

And the answer was clear. It sounded like drag racing. It sounded like top fuel drag racing... So that is what I wrote about.

It's probably my best tune, and everyone that hears it loves it.

Now I live in a house full of women. Big ones, little ones, a wife, and 2 daughters. And I know one thing:

LOVE IS NOT FOR THE FAINT OF HEART

So, remember the VH song?

--Right now, she is getting on with her life-- ouch!

Yeah, now it is your turn...

Why did you start doing music??

And even if you write sad songs (that mean so much..) you will be smiling while you do so.

Cheers,
Kim.Hi Kim-

I'm getting in on this fairly late, so forgive me if I'm off the mark- but you're looking for advice on TAXI? if so-I have had a very positive experience with them, and with the producers and publishing houses that I have gotten to know through my music submissions. I submitted about 30 songs over a year, and always received constructive feedback, about 99% of which I agreed with. I had about half of them forwarded on, and I have contracts with 10 songs so far- all jazz and blues tunes.

I just made my first 25 bucks in royalties last week, and I feel like I've hit the big time!

TAXI has some great info on the industry, production advice, and web hosting- all kinds of stuff. They've recently started posting some interviews with industry folks on youtube.

I recommend TAXI highly.

Hope this helps,

Chris

Yeh, I'm kinda an extroverted introvert though. If I do a personality test I often come out extraverted, but I guess there's some of that in all of us. I also struggle because I don't watch movies, keep up with popular culture, or watch football, or generally pay attention to most of the "default" conversation topics that go on. Here I can just talk music and music gear, or in this case, me ;o), and I don't "look stupid" if I don't answer a post.

I am, kinda, "in the thick of things" here where I live, which is a start, if the rent doesn't go up too soon and I can hang here for a bit. ;o) I met an actor in a well known independant Aussie film the other day just at random in the pub. Of course as I just said I don't pay attention to movies, so I hadn't seen it. ;o) Point is that I have gone out a few times and met people from bands, and even people who have worked with people I know who I've never met. I'm in the right place I guess.

There's a long list of reasons I struggle with this, not least of which is that I seem to only enjoy doing things myself or "my way". I do make space for people to work their own way, and I would allow somebody to produce my tunes themselves assuming they knew what they were doing, but if people are going to mess with my parts, I'd rather be somewhere else. ;o) I know that people hate controlling musicians. Thing is that often I am asked to control, because I'm quite good at it. Often I have to control because it's really obvious that the others are bad at it. There is probably the odd moment where I don't give a good idea the space it deserves, though the same happens to me. You know the politics.

There's a bunch of my muso friends who are building studios currently. I'm hoping I'll end up with a network of "Hey can you lay down three drum tracks this week for me" (as I don't do drums) type stuff so that I can properly get some good sounding stuff happening. We'll see...

Cheers,
Kim.

True. On some level just to bother complaining is a sign of hope.

I know what you're saying about the wrong lyrics. I have a few of those.
I was talking up doing live shows a while back, but didn't in part because I listened to my old lyrics and went "Mmm, some are just poor, while others are just plain WRONG!". I should rework them, but half of them I'd have to produce again and erghh... ;o)

Well before I post the link, let me say this link is NOT to my best material.
It just happens to be the last three songs I've done over the last two weeks or so. Yes, I need a singer. Yes the production is sloppy, but nobody listens anyhow, so what does it matter? ;o)

Beautiful Lonely is the song I recorded yesterday before my complaints/counselling session on the NG. ;o) Rough acoustic mix. Sorry.

Believe in Pure Love is a song that I could see U2 using on their next album if they didn't write all their own stuff, and yes it does need Bono singing it rather than myself, and yes that acoustic guitar in the bridge is out of time, and yes... but I can fix all that when I actually get motivated. I mean it's not hard...

Love Is The Door is a song I wrote about ARGHHHhhhhhhhh!!! ;o)

I'm sure you'll all listen and go "Well it's all so rough that no wonder nobody cares" but it's one of those circular situations where I can't be bothered putting the effort in because nobody is listening... Beautiful Lonely even has lines of lyrics written which I just stuffed up on the take which is on there and couldn't be bothered re-doing it. Lazy? Sure. Well, upset moreso...

Anyhow:
www.myspace.com/drschnauberg

Go on, tell me it's garbage. It probably is... ;o)

Cheers,
Kim.Chris,

Thanks for that. I think I will probably do the TAXI thing. Worst case I'll blow some cash. I've blown plenty of cash though already. Another $299 + $5 a song seems fairly irrelevant...

And I'm VERY interested to know that you've had quite a number of songs submitted, and gotten contracts yada yada. That goes into my theory that whether I was to succeed would depend upon whether I was actually good enough and making the right material for the people in question. In any case I could just use some honest unbiased appraisals.

I guess in a sense I've spent lots of time up until now trying to do everything myself, and I feel it's time to become part of some sort of team, and recognise my strengths and weaknesses. The first step is probably ironing out what I am actually best at, and finding appropriate people who have strengths in my weak spots. I know many of them already, but I'd like some other voices to tell me I'm right.

Cheers,
Kim.

If you are not using direct monitoring then have to make absolutely sure you are not monitoring the source in the MOTU cure mix or anywhere else other than the Cubase. If you are then you getting the original dry hardware sound mixed with the delayed software. If you are then no matter how low your latency is there will be some phasing or echo.

>hi guys-- haven't been here for a few YEARS, though have produced my usual yearly cd's on PARIS.

i'm still working on an old mac(G3 1997) with predictably sound(no pun intended) results, but encountering impossible problems with internal and external gear, most importantly my cd recorder.

i'm thinking it's probably time to switch to pro tools(boo--) and am wondering if i could buy a new mac and somehow convert my work to function under the latest mac OS and pro tools.

at this point i don't have the drivers to run even PARIS 3.0
my mac has no way of accessing the internet-- this email comes via an ancient pc.

i am not technical minded at all, and every move i make is frought with details that are extremely diffcult for me to work through.
 i'm an artist, basically, not an engineer, and am afraid, aften ten years of loving PARIS that i may lose it all and have to learn pro tools and lose 20 or so cd projects by myself and others that i have produced over the years.

any thoughts from you guys would be helpful.

chuck duffy rocks,
as do everyone who uses the news group--
thanks
jpi'm an old vet on these matters.

i am VERY impressed with the integrity underlying this string.

i worked with taxi for a few years, investing a LOT of time and more money than i had. i received about 75%(!) very positive responses, forwarded by taxi. also a number of respones that read as if they came from high school girls. (sorry about the non-pc language, but you know the sort of language and handwriting.)

i made one deal with a "stock" house, if you know what that means, but never heard from them again. there were also some lawyers who got excited and were interested in jumping on the train if "things got hot."

at a certain point, right before i dropped taxi from my life, i called michael and suggested that taxi run a specialized service, "limousine," if you will.
 if they REALLY believe that your work is of high quality, why not stand behind it and promote it directly and honestly to their clients on the market end? He declined for reaons you can guess at.

this was a few years ago, and perhaps taxi has matured and is now offering a better service.

as i say, i'm an old dude today and it's up to someone else to convince me before i return to taxi or any other "service" that appears, at least on the surface, as just one more song shark in sheep's clothing.

in the meantime, anyone who is experiencing success ANYWHERE on the boards-- you have my heart-felt congratulations and encouragement.

keep the faith.

jpGuys,

Direct Monitoring is controlled by cubase on the Motu 8pre.
I got it working again.
The problem I had is you cant have a project open and switch direct monitoring on and off willy nilly. With no project open I had no problem enabling direct monitoring.
I got it working... I think that may have fixed the phasing, but now I swear thru the CueMix Console the signal sounds...muddy..bassy...not well defined.

Hmm... I will have to mess with it some more.
I am testing it thru a SM57 and a CAD LDC tube mic.
I did get the talk back function working which is cool.
I will have to get one of those nifty lapel mics or cheap computer mics to install on my console for talk back.

So now back to the situation of getting some verb or other effects on the live monitored sound?
How are you guys handling this?
Am I the only one who likes to record this way or what?
It really help me get into the mood of the performance when I juice up the live feed a bit with effects that fit what I am trying to do...it isnt what I end up keeping , but it help with the mood.

b

It's beyond that. Writing a sad song is not telling the world about your sadness, it is making them feel their own. Writing on that level requires full possession of all your skills and concentration.

I would still consider a Mac. They are still easier to use, you won't have compatibility issues. It will just work, if the model is on their list, which I think they all are.

First thing I would do is get an external firewire hard drive, and back up everything. Just plug it in and drag and drop your files and folders. I'd drop a CD burner in the G3 and keep rolling with it. It's not hard to do.
 If you need a new hard drive it's just as easy to add, and or add additional drives. A new CD burner and a new drive should cost you less that a hundred bucks.

You could also do a transfer between systems via analog or digital depending on your set up. Depending on the music, I would want to drive paris hard on the transfer for the sound. If you have the I/Os, I would use Paris for final mixdown by running stems from PT to Paris.

I'd keep Paris around!

much, or all of it is true, even if it isn't proven conclusively in the lawsuit. One of the best retailers I've dealt with was put out of business by GC and Mars.

Of course Mars put themselves out of business. Though one has to wonder if GC helped them along a bit with some business "advice". ;-)

I can't see how GC is really staying in business from a service standpoint, so it would make sense that questionable/suspect business practices are about the only thing they have to offer. ;-))

True. I did my songwriting a little differently yesterday, in that I wrote a song "deliberately removed" if you like, in which I spoke of a girl, and the girl in the song was actually me in a sense, but in another sense just somebody. By putting myself in the third person however and making it a girl
I was able to better examine my own situation, as well as removing myself from it somewhat in the song writing process.

Mind you, at the same time I found I could relate to it better. I don't normally cry at my own songs, but I found it awefully difficult to do a vocal take early on...

>Right. Step back and listen to the music and ask "what it this really about"

A number of my tunes are going to need to be reproduced from scratch now that I'm getting back to a work flow I like, as well as finally reaching a point where I should be able to fully produce my solo stuff to a pro level.
Remaking them is a little annoying to me as it is the writing process I enjoy moreso than the recording process. The up side is however that if I consider it a complete rework process where lyrics are replaced etc then it becomes more a writing process again.

So now that that's sorted, if I can just meet the girl of my dreams in the next couple of weeks... ;o)

Yes. Steve Morse told me not to use the public as your editor... Get rid of any bad stuff before they ever hear it. There's usually something cool about every song. Pull it back to there and rebuild it.

Ahhh buggerit. You only meet cool women when you just couldn't care less and are happy. Women love men that have interesting lives and are in love with those lives.

Then they want you to give it up for them... snork...

Back in the 60s the US govermen called the Black Panthers a terrosit organization, it was not.. Then seeked to distroy them just beacause they wanted a better america for all especialy African Americans..

It hard for most white americans to belive that their country can do no wrong.
It's just that most of us who are non white belive in the US goverment no

>What's wrong wit Communism? I thought you were a Christian? Well anyways, try freedom!!! When you rule your people with military force and take their freedoms away It's not a good thing. They will kill anybody that does not want to go along. He will stay rich while the people live in poverty, that's the Communist way. He is just another communist dictator. He want's to arm Communist rebels all over south america. That's not good for anybody, especially America. That will cause conflicts that a lot of people will die in, possibly americans. The USA will not just stand by and watch south america fall to communism.

LaMont, I guess you are showing your true anti American colors. Or are you just bating? Please clarify.

Is that: man-eating pigs, or: man, eating pigs? In which case,
I don't know why you'd want to throw him into a Famous Dave's Pit BBQ location... I mean, what kind of punishment would THAT be?

:)Sarah's right-on about following your vision and not the money or latest big thing.

Another thing I have learned is that being a musician and artist means just doing it on what ever scale or stage you have available to you.
I've played for tens of thousands and I've played for 40. And I had just as much fun and gratification from doing a great job for 40.

Example: last weekend we had a wedding gig and my wife, the lead singer, got laryngitis - could not sing a note. I usually sing 5 songs a night, but this one was all on me. So I rose to the occasion and if I do say so myself, I killed it. I was pulling out songs I barely knew and the people were singing along and dancing like it was 1999. I had a BLAST and so did the ass-kicking band I put together, even though it was just a wedding and there were under 50 people attending.

Example 2: I worked for Chick Corea as his studio manager/technical dogsbody for a while and went out as his keyboard tech on a Japanese tour of the Electrik Band. These guys are arguably the finest electric ensemble in the world, each one a towering leader on their instrument, yet they played for the most part 2 shows a night at Blue Note clubs which seat 200-300 people. There were some larger concerts along the way, but nothing over 3,000. They all have to work their asses off to be successful, but they have thriving careers, and as long as they can work they can certainly make a good living (unlike some "successful" pop artists, whose careers can be incredibly short-lived). AND, most importantly they are doing what they LOVE.

Artists create the society. Your work IS valuable. There are victories to be had at every level of the industry, so just go do it. Don't think that if you are not in the big time you are nowhere. You are you.

Sorry man... gotta have some comedy first here. Bush Doe Snot. I get visuals of deer boxing glove hunting with Cheney and Dubya standing on the other side of the deer in question... ok,now that's out of the way and the tone is hopefully set :)

This isn't about Bush or who 'rags' him - frankly as a 'white american' that voted for him, I think he needs some of it for a few things I've seen. On the other hand: If you think Chavez and Castro are so great, why don't you move outta our house and into theirs? I'm sure you'd find plenty of opportunities like recording audio and freedom of speech and religion there. If you want to be able to admire leaders, why haven't you put more into getting candidates here in office that you 'can' admire?

I don't have a problem with betterment of African Americans. The BP's started out as a very good idea in a time when black men were under fire, and considered lesser men merited on skin color. As you may well know, I've worked with some higher profile AA's and it has zero to do with a color as far as I'm concerned - it's just people, some good some bad. However, you're going to stand there and tell me splintered BP's never, ever used violence for their agendas?
Frankly, I think a man's betterment doesn't come from some organization, it comes from opportunity, skills, education and unfortunately sometimes who you know. If this was still 1966, I'd agree with your stand but you are behind the times dude, and there is a lot of racism from every corner based upon old beliefs. Are you on the positive motion or the negative motion side of the fence man?

I'm not real sure what you're trying to say here, but if I'm reading this right from your other statements in this and past posts:
For me and those around me in perspective, color has little to nothing to do with it unless the race card is being pulled out for political leverage. An that ain't usually the 'white american'. Can we say Louisiana and Hurricane ever again in the same sentence w/o the race card coming up? I find this bad form and offensive LaMont, and telling of how you'd box in Deej into a catagory on auto pilot. Be careful of blanket statements like that, it sure doesn't shine a positive light man.

Kick back, have a glass of tea and think about why you are making this racial, and at who for what reasons. Then envision a more postiive response and outcome.

Well.....hmmmm.....OK.....here's the plan.....we feed the commies to mqan-eating pigs, then we feed the man-eating pigs to those poor unfortunate innocents who are being held at gitmo. Efficiency dude,.efficiency.....

Now....off to church.....

I honestly don't think it was LaMont's intent to make this personal. We definitely disagree on this, but it wouldn't be the first time he and I have disagreed. If we were in Venezuela right now.....depending on what we were disagreeing about, one of us might be a bit unhappier than we are right now.

I think we should all be wearin' the same hat here:

;o)
..I will shed no tears if GC gets a knee in the groin, but I would suspect that being a big box retailer selling music gear in the age of the internet has to be borderline impossible. I have a few good relationships with retailers, Morgan at East Coast and Mercenary, but the commodity stuff could just as easily be bought from sweetwater or audiomidi.com. Morgan and Mercenary distinguish themselves with superb post-sale support, and I recommend them often, but I don't know how anyone using non-abusive business practices could make it doing what GC does.

It's always easy to blame other countries. Other countries aren't beyond criticism, and finger pointing makes for fun discussions.

But clearly we need to start by facing up to our own significant responsibilities.

We are, as Bush recently recognized, addicted to oil. Has that sunk in? Hello, America, we are addicted. Addicts, the lot of us. To a resource that others control. To a resource that is finite, it will not last forever.

First and foremost, we need to curb our unhealthy oil dependency with smart conservation and a determined move toward other viable energy sources. NOW.

As we get serious about that, we will have more and better options for a rational foreign policy. Since we want to be a shining example for others to follow, this is a great path for us to walk.

We have a lot of work to do.

Cheers,

I'm the little blond asshole with an attitude.....yeah, I even had hair once upon a time.Well crafted songs, Kim! Great piano playing, too. I don't care for the f/x and EQ on the vocals - they are kind of washed out and have no definition or impingement. I'd like to hear some more arrangement and instruments too.

You're really talented and skilled and you need to stop feeling sorry for yourself.

I'd guess Randy Rhoades, because that would be 3/4's of Quiet taking a wild stab at it.

:DNo - This was before Quiet Riot.

Wolves

and Sheepdogs

The sheep are really offended at the idea that wolves even exist, but spend most of their time even more annoyed by the presence of the Sheepdogs.

The Wolves just want lunch. You'd be amazed how many sheep look just like lunch to them...

The Sheepdogs know the real score and stand ready to protect the comfy lives that the sheep enjoy most of the time. Sheepdogs are brave, strong, and will lay down their lives to save even sheep. They know one of their duties in life is to put the wolves in as much pain as possible and they do it very well.

So, on this beautiful Memorial Day, find a Sheepdog and give 'em a big hug. We owe them more than we can imagine.

THANK YOU VETERANS!Based on the visual evidence, I'd have to ask - How did you keep your hearing?

Most of the weasels are in Washington!On the news tonight, they were telling the cost of gas in countries around the world. The mentioned a few European countries that had gas in the $4.50 to $5.25/gallon range, and they wrapped it up by mentioning that in Venezuela's capitol, gas is going for $0.14/gallon.http://tinyurl.com/ytub2p

Well.....when the socialist economy totally collapses, they can eat gasoline I guess.

> THANK YOU VETERANS!Well we did the vox today.
I had it setup with direct monitoring.
I spent a couple hours getting familiar with the whole setup so I was comfortable and able to get around with it...

After the first take the vocalist asked for reverb.
So....out the door it went.
I had to switch back to the other method.
There was no problems.
Actually I didn't even try to hear any phasing.

The session went very well.
Very capable singer.
Stays on pitch pretty darn well.
The only issue I had was her dynamics were extreme.
I usually compress the vox to disk subtly.
Maybe 2db to 4db at the most.
She sang so softly in some parts and so loud in the others that it took me a while to get the threshold just right.
She ended up spiking the comp with up to 8db-10db.
More than I like but it turned out well.
I suppose I could have backed off the ratio a bit, but I wasnt thinking.
To busy trying to "look" professional.
Anyway.
I got a nice foundation to mix with.
I am pleased with the tracking.
I would have liked for her to sing more harmony parts, but she really didnt care for the song too much and wasnt willing to do more than 5 takes total.
Oh well.

It will be fun mixing.
Thanks for all the help with this thread.
I will post the finished product when I get there.

This is why I absolutely love my Forssell CS-1. I can set it up with massive amounts of compression and it will be transparent under all but them most extreme circumstances.....plus, while it is compressing, something very nice happens to the signal..

Glad you got it happening.

DeejLast week I was in Guitar Center (yeah, I know...) and noticed they had NI's Komplete 4 upgrade for $199, which is quite a good deal as it's $299 online everywhere else. It's been on my list for a while, so I decided to go back this morning and pick it up in case it sells out during their Memorial day "sale".

I didn't see it on the shelf, and of course the salesman has no idea what the heck I'm talking about. So we go to a software sale table to look for it - he starts picking up boxes of Reason Refills (I refrain from chuckling out loud, though it was reeaaaallly hard to do :-). I finally find the K4 upgrade box and the red and yellow "sale" tag says $249. I lift up the tag, and underneath is the big red and white $199 tag. I laugh and show the salesman, saying "I guess $249 is a better deal than $199" - he laughs nervously and says they can do $199 on it.

Sale you say? Sure.... I guess ineptness isn't illegal, otherwise the lawsuit against GC would be a slamdunk case. ;-))

While GC does deserve the lawsuit, in way I would miss the comedic relief if they were to go bye bye as a result.

DTVary cool!

------=_NextPart_000_0046_01C7A1E0.63151220--Hi Everyone,

Have been out of the Paris loop for a couple of years due to newborn children. A friend of mine has some project he wants to throw together that involves manipulating a couple of wav files. I can't get them to import. I'm guessing they are not formatted correctly. Would anyone be kind enough to take a look at them and give me the quickest solution on how to make them import friendly.

Thanks as always.

Actually the media story changed when it became more popular to switch sides. pro war was selling more papers for a time... now anti war serves the same purpose.

I can buy some of course, and have already purchased a CD which should be on it's way. I have my eye on another. I was wondering if anybody has any favourite libraries or sounds they use or recommend, or good places to buy suck things.

Or if anybody has any that they could share, that would also be excellent. I'm not asking for pirate copies of purchased disks. I was more thinking of either samples people have made themselves or something.

But I thought it was worth asking around here in case somebody has a massive collection of samples they want to share. I know people often keep their sounds as their little trademark bag of tricks, so no expectations...

....just thought it was worth the question.

Apparently it takes Akai and Roland samples as well. Obviously anything can be converted with PC software, but ASR-10 / EPS series sounds would be ideal if anybody has advice or has some they're willing to share.

That's why they call it a "Sample-r" not a "Sampleplaybacker-er".

:DWonder if one of you more Mac-aware people could diagnose this trouble: friend of mine is trying to give me some sd2 files he's made on his little ProTools LE rig at home... He drags 'em into a folder, burns them onto a data cd, and when I open them here (on the PC) Windows only sees them as generic "files" -- that is, not audio files, or sd2's in particular -- just "files". Name and size looks right, but -- they won't open in Wavelab, which is the Swiss Army knife of audio apps... I figure he's overlooking some kind of detail on his end -- he's not much of a computer geek, Mac or otherwise.

Haven't seen this particular glitch yet-- anybody?

TIA -- chas.Windows identifies files by the three caharacter extension after the period. If the files were named without them, windows won't have a clue what to do with them. What windows are you running?

Thanks for everyone's help. I got the two stereo files to import but the mono file comes in sounding like the chipmunks. Any ideas. It's the file that begins with DM

Thanks again

BarryRename the files on your pc with the .sd2 extension. Mac doesn't use extensions, that's why windowz doesn't know what it is....

> TIA -- chas.I posted this at the Steiny forum, but no replies yet. Hoping one of you guys who has been on C4 for a while can suss out what I may have done wrong. I just got C4 and it is throwing me for a loop this time. I could not find a thing in the manual on these.

Somehow overnight I have 2 new problems.

1) I seem to have lost all my C4 synth settings. Before, they would all be there when I wanted to change a sound in Halion or any of the Cubase synths. Now it just shows the Browser and Filter with a tree of content folders, but I cannot figure out how to access the content.

2) Now when I open a synth with multiple outputs, it only gives me 1 output in the mixer even though the synth is set for multiple outs. I am not using instrument tracks. These are synths I added to the VSTi synth rack. When I first installed it, it did not have this problem. I have tried adding new synths to projects that have multiple outs on synths already, and it only gives the first output.

I have already tried reinstalling, hoping it would go back to the way it was behaving originally, but the problems persisted.Damn, C4 seems to be a problematical beeatch, judging from you, Deej & Brandon... any way you guys can migrate back to SXv3.xxx?

Hehe, just rub it in why don't you? ;o)

I just found a website with 1200 odd samples to play back though... :o)

Cheers,
Kim.I'd like to go to 3 but I was never on 3. I went from SX to C4 (I was using Samplitude for the past several years.)

If I had a 3 disk I could use it with my dongle, but I don't got it.

If you like the Paris EDS plate reverb at all, you will LOVE the M3000- it is so unobtrusive but real.

However, my friend Darren Rahn makes a living as a producer, among other things, and really loves the KSP8...

>LaMont, I am going to give you the benefit of the doubt here and assume good motives on your part.

What concerns me is that you use the admission that Chavez is a dictator as simply another opportunity to blast Bush.

This does NOT make your case against Bush stronger, it makes it weaker because you are not willing to stand against Chavez. It makes you seem like a dishonest lefty blowhard who hates his country so much that he will praise anyone who criticizes it, no matter how wretched they are.

I prefer to think that is not the case.

If it is, then:
What makes you different from the anti-communist idiots who put us on the side of the mujahadeen against the russians in the Russian war in Afghanistan?

Is the enemy of your enemy really your friend?

Back in the 1970's after we left Vietnam, there was a humanitarian disaster as the victorious north took revenge on those who had opposed them in the south. There were thousands of "boat people" doing anything they could to escape torture and death and many died. Millions died in Cambodia as the new dictators pursued ideological purity.

So, Joan Baez spoke out against the persecution of these "boat people" by the new communist leaders. She called fo peace and forgiveness in the new Vietnam.

Guess what? She was blasted by Jane Fonda. When asked why, Jane responded that it was unacceptable to criticize a communist government! We on the left just don't DO that, don't you see?

My point is that you have to be either Jane or Joan. Y ou do NOT have to be a conservative to tell the truth about Chavez, and telling the truth about Chavez does not mean you have to like Bush.

It simply means you have to be honest.

Aaron,

I see/hear/read paraphrases of what you posted all the time. On bumperstickers, on the net and I hear it in casual conversation. It's a re-hash of love it or leave it.

The thing that f@#(*&(kills me about it, every time I hear/see/read it from people I love/hate/mildly dislike is that it boils down to the MOST ANTI AMERICAN expression possible.

Chuckand is an incredibly dated sampler compatible with your goals of being a jazz musician :-)

If we have none, and you can say anything you wish, then does being

He is a coward and a tyrant.

You talk about free speech being so american. Evidently you don't think the Venezuelans deserve it though, since their dictator has such big balls and all.

Are Venezuelans less human than americans?

Speaking of freedoms, here are more of the CIA Bush lackeys marching in the
