-----=_NextPart_000_0125_01C79A6E.E075E010--Hey, DeeJ - I know someone who just might be interested in the Portaflex... I'll get in touch with him & let you know. Everything works on it, right?

t fine. It's very old and some of the hardware is sprung, rusty or was just so far gone that I had to throw it away. I have been thinking of putting another couple hundred buckin into it for a full restoration. If the buyer wants authenticity, I would buy the following from fliptops.com

Cart mount-$2.00

Cart mounting knob assembly-$18.00

Tilt back leg-$10.00

About 8' of gasketing for mounting the reconed Alnico and the front grille (which buzzes if used while tracking-I usually remove it)-$15.00

B-15 Hardware kit-$90.00 (not really necessary, but a couple of the hinges are sprung and the other hardware is rusty.

Right now I have a heavy duty EV mounted in the cab that I haven't removed because it sounds so good. I mounted in in there when I sent the original speaker fro reconing. The the chrome on the amp was cleaned at one time with steel wool (not by me) and is abraided a bit, but this isn't a super flaw. The cabinet has some buzzes that are apparent when the amp is cranked (what old amp doesn't). It could use some tightening up or crosssbracing to eliminate these. I have also had the original power cord replaced and an XLR plug installed to connect the head to the cab and the ground switch on the
