d as many VSTi's as you want to run, and you're about as far away from that old school as you can get (whether there are oleanders growing outside your door or not lol!).

Personally, I think part of it is just a longing for a certain sound - a sound that's practically as good as gone as a dated genre of music in & of itself. Tape sounded a certain way, digital sounds another way, I like aspects of both & I miss tape in a way, but hey, it's a new century.

Yeah, but since technology marches forward bringing costs down, NOW you can also get $3k mixers that - if the hype on the new MTA stuff is true (check out various gearslutz threads on these) - sound like some of the baddest mofo desks EVER!

I like a lot of modern mixes, but I also still like - and will probably always like - a lot of the older stuff, too. Example: the other day I'm driving in the car & the Manfred Mann cover of "Blinded by the Light" comes on, as I was going along listening it occured to me what a great mix that is - I don't think you could make that mix any better no matter where/how/when, and on what format you recorded it to. It's just a killer mix! Could it be "different"? Sure, but what could make it "better", nothing - I really think they nailed it.

>Problem is, we have to start mixing by the rules of digital..

Not if guys like Charles Dye continue to preach their gospel.
"Mix it Like a Record", basically means: "take EVERY wonderful aspect

d moving clockwise around the table:

Tyrone, Kerry Haps, Brian Porick, Chris Ludwig, Ron Baylin, Me, and Gene Lennon.

Note, Kerry and Brian come from Wheaton College. Ron is the guitar player in my band and, while not a Paris user, is an admirer, after hearing some of the mixes I did of our work and watching me track and edit. Not that I am that good - he's just easy to impress!

Noticibly out of the shot was one big, crunchy cockroach.

So, now we have had Italian, seafood, and Spanish. What are we up for in 2009? See you then!
