inal lineup, and
this should be good.

pabDon,

Since you seem to wish to stop this discussion, I will abbreviate my comments in this message and will hold no expectation of answer to any questions...

> We all agree on how you can be saved. You do not believe in > such things. There is your problem.

That is a blanket statement and I'm not sure which "we" you mean. I also find it interesting that you seem to know my beliefs better than I do. I am not an atheist. I believe in salvation, redemption, and atonement. But if salvation is between me and my Lord, then I don't have to fear the so-called war on faith or the expectations, judgments or condemnations of those such as yourself who presume to know the one truth. The only real "problem" I have is determining which path is the true path...

> No, they are verbal and historical issues that you use to dismiss

I do not wish to dismiss the content, I wish to ascertain its truth. If Jesus was indeed God-incarnate here on earth, why is it that the first three Gospels don't mention that, and it is only near the end of the first century that the idea is written down in the fourth Gospel? If it were true, and the Christian writers were there to witness it, I would have expected that idea to infuse ALL of the Christian writings in the first century, regardless of the intellectual abilities or knowledge levels of those writers.

> Doug, let's give this NG a break OK? This is clearly pointless.

I'm sorry you think it's pointless. Heehee, I won't ask what you think is pointless about it - I think we both know. ;-) Thank you for your input. I've learned a lot about you and your beliefs. I will continue to seek knowledge and wisdom from other sources...

> No. I imagine you will grow comfortable with your beliefs > being dismissed with a wave of the naturalist hand.

Well, I'm getting more and more comfortable with my beliefs being dismissed with a wave of the Christian hand... ;-)

To speak in terms I think you understand, may The Lord bless you and keep you, Don Cicchetti. Go in peace.

P.S. My real email address has been included in each of these posts. If you are ever near Tucson, I invite you to be my guest. Please contact me. BTW, have you ever visited a Redemptorist Center?

P.P.S. Might I prevail upon you to lay off the judgmentalism towards Thad and others who don't share your beliefs? Pray about it and I bet

I get the message :engine cant etc check leads."

I then take the string out of the config file and it loads up. I try to change to word clock and I get flashing red sync plus cards flash. Ive tried it with Big Beb in off, on without and i cant change to word clock ,both MEC's flash. ive reinstalled paris twice. Has anyone had the wordclock input ever fail on a MEC

Hope someone can help

Less honest? You mean they had...an agenda? BTW, how do you prove the assumption that they were less intelligent? I can easily see how they might be less knowledgeable, but less intelligent? Hard to prove...

>> Being scholarly is not exclusionary to any reality.

So, "scholarly" is open to change, but faith isn't? How does one deal with new information that challenges one's faith? Yell "heresy" and call out the troops to fight the upcoming war on faith?

Oh, sorry, I'll stop now..."both MEC's"... you realize you only need the house sync line if you have three or more MEC's right??? Do yourself a favour, remove the line in the config file, feed external clock the the first MEC, loop to the second and be done. Simply set the project to word clock sync... we've been doing it that way for years with "0" trouble.

Thanks !Thanks Mike. The body is quilted maple veneer over basswood.
I love the sound of basswood and the maple on top seems to make it even better. It has an ebony fingerboard.

I designed it and did much of the assembly and wiring. The body and neck are from USA Custom Guitar. The pickups are Tom Andersons.
The hardtail bridge is a Callaham baseplate with KTS Titanium saddles.

I have an article that is tentatively approved for one of the guitar mags.
I'll post the details when I know more.

like i've said in another post i ran into a guy at a booth at the home/garden show this weekend with the same problem. pus there were 3 other macs at the shop with the same problem from just that week. so i'd say it's not that rare at all.

I of your PC problems? At your $60.00 an hour, that's got to add up quick.

As far a rick goes, he has a second hand machine that is out of warranty.
Second, I, a former dealer tried to help. I told him what he needed to do, to possibly get a new MOBO. It's his time. If rick wants to do things his way, you can't blame Apple. Even if rick's MOBO had a memory slot that was out, like the one in my PC, it would still be useable and worth something.

Let's get back to your math;) You still haven't accounted for the $35,000.00 plus It's going to cost you for the divorce for switching Amy to a PC;)
And that's just the attorney bill!

The term doesn't cover a huge range of beliefs - just one. It is people in our human imperfection that diverge on beliefs.
Christianity implies a very simple faith in Christ as God's son, sent to give his life on behalf of all of us.
People make it more complicated than that simply because we are imperfect.
No human born belief system is perfect. Faith in God is only originated, and perfected in and through Christ, not in in lieu of.

How is that different from non-Christian/agnostic/atheist belief systems?
(even a lack of belief in a deity is a belief system). It's easy to judge Christianity's faults without acknowledging the complete failure of a non-religious society to have a lasting positive impact on the world as a whole in terms of peace, unity, love and compassion.

I would have to say the divergence among Islamic sects (Sunni and Shiites) significantly overshadows the variations among Christian denominations.

Not sure I follow you here. Are you saying that Christians divert criticism to make it appear something it isn't, or are you using the convenience of ambiguous non-Christian beliefs to say the Christianity is rarely unfairly criticized. :-)

To expand a bit, are you implying that it's normal/okay for anyone to criticize Christianity in the interest of balance, but when Christians bring that criticism to light, it's an opportunistic way of "rallying the faithful", as it were?

In truth, who is being opportunistic? By the same token, there are a lot of people in different camps (white vs black, minority vs. minority, culture vs. culture) that say the other is in no way unfairly treated simply from lack of being in that other camp.

It's really just a matter of people using their own frame of reference to evaluate someone else's, but that's the crux of what I think you are saying people shouldn't do. It seems to me, that should apply to all, not just Christians.

How many news casts, books or documentaries focused on a handful of "Christians" and used or altered that to claim that Christianity is assaulting America? I have seen few if any news stories that say anything good about Christians in many years. Dirt sells, so we as a country are more than happy to dish it out about anyone we don't have to look squarely in the eye on a daily basis, whether it's the truth or not. Sad isn't it?

Denominations of Christianity are splintered on varying issues, but only a few would call or consider those issues divisive. In contrast, I would find it quite difficult if not impossible to use the irreligious world as a reference point for unity.

More than not, divisiveness within Christianity actually originates outside the walls of the church where Christians are faced with a world that demands they check their beliefs (in visible form) at the door when leaving the home, and accept what the world considers moral, right and just. Disagreements only gain weight when there is gravity to tug on them.
