make you a singer.

The same musicians that may have spent months achieving just a few basic rudiments, and years perfecting other techniques on their own instrument can sometimes think that someone should just be able to step in front of a mic & emote with the best of them.

I guess a few lucky ones can - just as there is that rare instrumental prodigy who can do the same - but for the most part, singing requires some woodshedding, too.

Let's put it this way... although we've all heard of musical prodigies, how many instances h as anyone heard of where someone is in a recording studio & just picks up a complex instrument totally unfamiliar to them & nails a great take (no, I'm not talking about a bass player doing a cowbell track - the voice is a complex instrument). Anyone ever hear of this sort of thing happening? If so, I'm sure it's the rare exception & not the norm.

Why should the voice be any different?

NeilThis really is more of a pissing match than anything else, and won't really effect anyone. The Spamhaus guys say (I think correctly) that the Illinois court has no jurisdiction to make the order and refused to contest it. So the judge didn't have a lot of options.

Also, there are other ways to get spam blacklists, including other ways to get the Spamhaus list. Trust me, if my spam trap suddenly quits working 'There's this court case in Illinois' is not going to cut it with the powers that be in my office.
