I'll skip the stuff about chimps, but your analogy is simply wrong. You said s lacked the tools to understand the defects in his subjects. That's nothing like Greek sculptors not being able to predict computer art. The ability to create art is something that all cultures in history have had, they didn't need anything other than themselves to do it. Same goes for personality, it might not use the technical language of modern psychology but from Montaigne to Aquinas to Suetonius all the way back to Sophocles and Homer and those predating even them people have been able to understand personality flaws.

Can I understand Plato in exactly the same way a third century BC Athenian did? Of course not. But to claim that this robs me of any chance of gathering something from his writing, and that he can't possibly have the tools to understand personality defects because he was denied the opportunity to read Hare, that is reductivist solipsism dressed in its most jarring, garish vestments.

Actually, ISTR that E-H had a good amount of stuff that was cheaper than some of the Boss units "back in the day". The bigger E-H goodies like the Deluxe Memory Man - yeah those were kinda pricey. The Boss stuff right outta the box sounded CLEANER, though... the Electro-Harmonix Noise Gate was the only noise gate ever made th at actually ADDED noise lol.

I think it was the sound quality & lack of having something that sounded like you were mic'ing a bagful of bees & snakes and mixing it in with your guitar signal that got Boss widespread usage. MXR = different type of sound - their stuff all had a certain not-too-versatile signature kinda sound... IOW it sounded good, but if you used their Distortion+, it had one tone to it, no matter where you set it, same with their phaser; so when Boss & Ibanez, etc. came out with useful, more versatile AND affordable good-sounding EFX, they took off.

I'm with ya there - which is why I own what I own & don't have even a single veentagee' mic (although i don't know about your choice of the $500 price point as a reference).

the sound, it's just that if you're a big-name producer/mixerguy & you mix exclusively ITB, then some hack second engineer can simply copy all your channel settings & "learn" how to mix just like you do... and then if he's successful at it, he can then go around & undercut you & get the same results. The real chance of this individual actually being able to replicate someone's style simply by doing this = pretty slim, indeed. The fear of this happening = pretty significant, I betcha. TotalRecall may capture every knob position on your SSL, but it doesn't know squat about what outboard gear you used & how it was set, and that's a big part of the sound of a mix, but "Copy all Channel Settings" on a completely ITB mix sure does!

of the current of modern digital recording, like greater resolution, better clarity, SNR's so high that they don't even matter anymore.... and ADD A BUNCH OF NOISY SHIT TO IT!" He advocates adding a little bit of distortion to every track... I mean, C'mon! Why do we have 24-bit convertors, then? We should just seek out some old 12-bit ones! :D

Neil Only thing I know about the Digimax is that a friend of mine had one of the older ones & he complained about lack of headroom. Don't know if that's been addressed in the newer units.

But Dave, check out the MOTU 8Pre, too... I picked up one of those awhile back - mainly for toms - and it sounds pretty dang clean to me.
