Yes, the name isn't top shelf.

That is the problem with the biz. So you aren't shit unless you got an SSL and a full blown ProTools system. I guess it depends on what you want to do. A lot comes down to engineering skills.

Right now nothing in the market does what the Tascam does for the money. I think it should be listened to first before it's completely dismissed. I'm sure you can get some good work done on the Tascam. For any thing critical, most would use an out board mic pre. With the Tascam, you could save a lot of money to buy high end mic pres.

There are still guys running studios with Mackies and Adats that are making money. I wouldn't do it but we are all on different levels.

Did I say an SSL? No, I suggested an older lower-range Trident;
it's going to sound a fuckload better from input to mixdown than, any Tascam I've ever heard AND it's got a name people recognize as being top-shelf.

1.) You really don't "need" a console these days - what, with most people preferring to mix & match external mic pres & channel strips anyway.

2.) If you DO get a console, it then becomes the focus of your room, and your rack of massenburg, neve, and API preamps takes an immediate back seat; and because lots of clients are brand-aware, you'd better make it a good desk, otherwise you may find your "investment" may actually cost you gigs.

First it was said in effect that Steve Jobs is a bad guy and greedy. I totally disagree. you should really look at Gates and Balmer, if you want to call people greedy.

Sounds like communist idealism! So all enterprise and businesses are greedy?

#1 - I never said anyone in particular was greedy, nor am I looking to call anyone greedy. You are arguing your ideals with anyone that post in any Mac related thread and putting words in other posters posts to continue your Apple crusade. It's getting really, really old.

#2 - If you mistakenly and sadly think that Habitat for Humanity and other charity organizations are communist idealistic principles, and can't distinguish between corporate and altruistic motivations, then obviously you have other issues.

Like I said, I'm not stating an opinion either way about either company. You are the only one with the vehement and somewhat unnervingly biased opinions here.

Good luck with that. Nothing personal.

:)Thanks Doug and Thad. I'm up to around 400 bounces but it seems to be slowing down...

When I think of altruistic organizations serving the betterment of mankind, Apple and Microsoft don't even come to mind. They don't just fail to come to mind 1st or second...they just don't come to mind.

Arguing the humanitarian value of large corporations whose product is at best a luxury item for most of the world is a bit like arguing that it doesn't rain enough on the sun and Mercury is to blame. ;-)

Also, in my not so humble opinion.

It sounded like you were saying by nature all businesses are greedy. Thad was saying that SJ is greedy. He also stated it's because iTunes is closed and Apple has tied iTunes to their hardware. It's true that it is tied to their hardware MP3 players, that's just smart business for them, and it is because of the deals they made with the record companies. I don't think they had much of a choice.

Apple did however open iTunes up to WinBlows! Apple doesn't keep you from add non Apple purchased MP3 to their iPod. They make a Windows version of the iPod, and they don't charge any more for it. Jobs would like to drop all DRM, and open up the market to third party MP3 players. He's knocked for that here also. Why should SJ ever open it up to third party MP3 players? Did MS open up VMs in all their version of Vista? No! Why not?

This post was DJ he was saying that he didn't find any thing wrong with iTunes. I think he expected it to be a "KLUG". I posted back to tell him about some cool features and some ways I've used it. but it wasn't long before someone posted, WINDOWS! WINDOWS! WINDOWS! Windows Media Player is good too! OK! Where did MS get the ideas for the features, the interface, the look and even down the Aqua note with the CD? They copied it from Apple!!!!!!!!!!

So then it went to Thad knocking Apple, iTunes, Steve Jobs for their DRM and being greedy. Not cool! Apple's DRM isn't really DRM. I drag files on to my non Apple MP3 player all the time with no problems and no restrictions. Just compare that to Microsoft's DRM! Look at all the big brother shit MS has going on in their software. They steal from others and then prosecute others for copying their software. Yes software Nazis! Maybe your cool with this kind of unethical business practice, where did you say your from?

Apple and crusade? No, just standing up to the lies and the bashing. By the way, there are some Mac users here. Since you bring up crusades, who is on a crusade? Aren't you the big Christian? Your posts aren't so Christian like!!!! Maybe you should think about things. You've even said you posting to screw with me. So have fun with your taunting posts.

I never said Habitat for Humanity or any other charities are communist. It sounded like you were saying all businesses are greedy, and that statement sounds like communist idealism. So how many days have you volunteered for Habitat for Humanity?

Nothing personal? Come on dude, it's getting totally personal!

Yo, Mr Isallimsayin makes a good point here -- that a "console becomes the focus of your room" is undeniably true. And the brand-consciousness of the average Studio User is therefore likely to undermine the joy of parking a "Yamaha DM-anything"" in the middle of ones little World of Sound.

Which ain't to say that this console isn't a worthy piece of gear -- just that it lacks mojo.

Then again, this neo-Neve thing they're rolling out at $30k for 16 channels is an example of the opposite extreme -- jacking up the price of something on account of whose name is tattooed on the side...

I've said here.

I said over and over again that it's just a silly computer regardless of who makes it.

Hardly of significance in the grand scheme.

And since you are choosing to throw my faith back in my face and slander me personally as a means to support your argument then this conversation is over.

Btw - I've spent a lot of time volunteering for Habitat in 4 different states, have a close relative that works for them, and have met and heard Millard Fuller speak in person (the founder).

The SSL PT thing was a figure of speech, well maybe not. I have had people actually say this many times. I guess my point is, it depends on what level your on, and what you charge. I'm sure some people would not pay to record in a Tascam room. I'm sure there are people that wouldn't record in Steinberg/RME room either.

There is no substitute for good equipment. I just think you can get professional results with some less expensive equipment. I think it's best to become educated about a product and listen to it before writing it off because of it's name. The mixes I'm heard from the Tascam do sound good. I'd like to get some time in on one myself, but My Panasonic DA-7 MKII works for me right now.

If you go back and look at my lust list, I have the Toft ADB, and the Neve 5088 listed. The Neve is an example of a different level.

It is my opinion that there is still a place in the studio for a mixer. The whole ITB thing is over rated, with maybe the exception of Paris.

Hey, where'd my Studer go??

DCIf you could careless, then why are do you keep posting? Oh yeah, you already answered this, it's because you want to screw with me. Your free to do what you want, but you should think about your posts.

First this wasn't a conversation, this was a Mac bashing, again! This post started out nice, it's not so nice anymore! Slander you? I don't think so! So are you now threatening me? Your the one that's making this personal. Go back and read all your posts!

I'm glad you have volunteered for Habitat for Humanity, that's a good thing.
