>Hi Rod,

I guess I just assume everyone knows the history of the effect boxes. The Dp/4 was an earlier effect box, and the dp/pro was its successor.

It looks to me, and I'm only guessing based on comments in the code, that when the developers set out to make the dp/pro, they first translated the dp4 algos to the esp2 chip. Those initial translations were left in the source code folder.

They then modified the code to make it what we saw in the dp/pro. In the case of the halls, there massive changes. The Pro version is wider and more transparent. But, they also removed the chorusing in the pro version, which gives the dp/4 version slightly nicer last split seconds of tail.

The dp/4 versions sound incredibly nice. The DP4 ran at 16 bit, 40.5 KHz. Those same algos at 44.1 with 24 bit stereo inputs sound really nice.

I hope this helps!

Rod, Just in case it wasn't clear, the DP4 was a 16bit box, the DP Pro was a 24bit box.
