I disagree with you here. I love Asia, and I've got an acoustic set from several years ago by the original four that simply kicks ass.

I also bought the "Gold" cd collection - another amazing remaster job that removed a lot of the "Mike Stone Factor" (no bass, muddy overblown mix). The songs are clear and have punch now - the way I knew they were recorded.

I'm looking forward to it.

Granted, the band lost its way during the 90's when it was down to one or two original members. But I really like the orig reme assumptions that Vista is a bloated waste of bits and bytes (or rather for any PC users interested):

<http://www.rainrecording.com/vista/performance>

Scroll down for the graph. Cubase 4 was used. Pretty big jump in plugin count with Vista over XP32. Vista 64 and 32 will be the same as Cubase 4 (I believe) is still a 32-bit app.

Sorry for the selective quote Don, but that's hilarious!

DougSaw that one. I'm already so tired of the 2008 election campaign I am considering dumsterring my TV, as that's all that I will be seeing from now on if I choose to turn it on. Some of the most creative and productive tomes of my life happened when a TV was nowhere around. this might be a good time to do some songwriting. I can choose from the survivors of the bloodbath without having to participate. They pretty much have all done their posturing and campaigning already, the rest is just going to be recyling

Everybody dies . . . some people decide not to wait for their own special life sentence and take matters into their own hands in order to end their suffering. Yes, it's sad that no one could relieve his pain before he took this irreversible step, and it's very sad for loved ones, but blame is pointless and serves only to add misery to a miserable situation.

a, and use it for actually getting music and audio work done.

OS's aren't a political statement for me. They are just a means to an end.
The post about Cubase 4 performance was just useful info for PC users.
Anything wrong with that?
