>Interesting perspective Deej. I know you are very aware of peak oil. And as oil supply fails to keep up with demand, it's likely that the resulting situation will have tax implications which will need to be faced somehow.

How would you handle the tax implications of the transition to a mix of energy sources? Use it as an opportunity to push for low tax policies?
Use it as an opportunity to raise taxes? We'll probably see both of those approaches at least.

It's interesting that Dingle, of all Senators, would be the one to start that conversation, eh? Party aside, he has been one of the chief representatives of the auto industry's interests in Washington.

lectric bill. He can go fuck himself.

John Edwards who preaches about how he cares about the poor has a 28,000 sq foot house. He can go fuck himself.

Tiger Woods just bought a 65 million dollar house. He can go fuck himself.
These people have WAY too much and never seem to get any humility. Fuck em all. Hypocritical assholes.

Still waiting on Hillary's tax returns for last year.He, he, I must smile a little....isn't it these things

We actually have one here that was modded by Mike Claytor. He put a tube in it , sounds warmer and Brighter
if you can imagine that ?
Mike had a parts list on this way back when - if this feeble mind can recall , somewhere about 2002 ?
I could be off a decade or so ~ time really flies around here :)

inimal government, clean air and neighbors who actually care about each other. Money is just the gambit that has been used to leverage our day to day needs and make us all slaves. Like the bullshit energy crisis.
Where are the "new" ideas to decouple us from oil.....fucking nowhere.
This government is horseshit. I can't ! wow
